

"That's more like it!" says genial Mr. Rector

It is not often that George Rector, world-famous food connoisseur and consultant, becomes indignant, but he admits it does irritate him to see perfectly good frankfurters relegated to picnics and hot dog stands. They deserve a better fate, he insists, and here Mr. Rector has given them one. This tasty luncheon dish or informal buffet snack involves a triple alliance between three certified food favorites—frankfurters, bacon and American cheese.

Cut the frankfurters in half lengthwise with a sharp knife. Cut $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch slices off a package of certified American cheese, also lengthwise. Slip a slice of cheese between the two halves of the frankfurter, and then wrap a strip of bacon spiral-fashion around them both. Fasten each end with half a toothpick. Broil until the bacon is crisp, the cheese melted, and the frankfurters at their most delectable juiciness, concludes Mr. Rector.

U. S. Civil Service Announces Open Competitive Exams

LIBRARY

This year the Public library is cooperating with the collector's group of the Highland Park Woman's club by exhibiting in the library's two vestibule show cases, examples of the articles being discussed: silver, lamps, lustre, saints and symbols, etc.

This week there have been two exhibits, one of old silver, the other old lamps, lighting devices. The window devoted to silver, contains some choice pieces: a coin silver communion goblet; a fish slice, 1800; a tea caddy spoon, 1807; and a marrow scoop, 1724 — the last three, Georgian.

The other window contains examples of early lighting devices from grease lamps, whale oil lamps, to hand blown glass lamps. Crude as these may be from our viewpoint of scientific lighting, they are all artistic in line and in design.

It is interesting to study the old lighting devices from the standpoint of uses and needs. They had to light not only the living quarters of the family, but the coaches, village stores, old canals, docks. Sometimes a light was placed in the window for the benefit of a lonely neighbor across the hollow.

In the collection displayed in the library there is an especially attractive piece — a low blue glass holder containing a short candle, and to match the base a blue glass shade decorated with a delicate white figure. This was called a Fairy lamp. The library has received the gift of a valuable old map of Highland Park from Miss Irene Rockenbach, town clerk of Deerfield. She found the crumbing bit of paper among some old documents and letters in the Old Town hall of Deerfield. The map is the earliest one of Highland Park.
