DORCAS HOME NOTES

by Irene Ely

"Hurry with your work 'cause everybody's playing 'kick the can'." Don't worry; I'll be done in no time!"

And we don't worry when we're told that, because experience has proven this far too true, much to the regret of Mrs. Graham and Nurse. . . Now, I'm not implying that we don't do our work at all, but—well, you know how it is when you're in a hurry, 'specially when the gang's waiting for you. Somehow you overlook all those corners and window sills, or you thought you had emptied the waste basket, while you completely forgot the garden, so—need I say more?

Of course Mrs. Graham and nurse had been plotting it all along because it was much too carefully planned. It was at the breakfast table when they innocently suggested it, and we just as innocently accepted; in fact, we were quite enthused about the whole scheme.

Well, I don't know how I expect to hold your interest when I haven't even mentioned what I'm talking about! You see, it's blackmarks!—which means we must do our work well enough to pass the inspection of Mrs. Graham, or else—"A blackmark for you!"

No, that wasn't the part that enthused us. It was that those having the fewest black marks should have a party with a prize for those (?) not having any. But what I can't understand is why we agreed to add an hour make-up work for each black mark in case the party wasn't a big enough goal. However, I have one consolation:

"How is the bookkeeping coming along, Mrs. Graham?"
