Boston Battering Ram Meets County's Jim McMillen Friday

Marshall George vs. Jim McMillen. Juan Humberto vs. Bert Rubi. Walter Palmer vs. Jimmy Landis. Cecil McGill vs. Bad Boy Brown.

Two hundred and thirty-seven pound Marshall George, the Boston battering ram of wrestling and conqueror of such top flight heavyweights as Danno O'Mahoney, Yvon Robert, and all six of the Dusek brothers, will get the big chance of his middleweight title campaign Friday night in Peg's Grayslake arena when he goes up against Lake county's own Jim McMillen.

George is one of the super-heavyweights of the sport, standing well over six feet in height and tipping the beams at more than 15 pounds over McMillen's weight. He started wrestling professionally five years ago in Portland, Oregon, while working as a lumberjack in the great forests of the northwest. When he came east seeking his fortune in sports he caught the eye of Paul Bowser, prominent in eastern wrestling circles, who helped train him for his present career. Bowser is expected to sit at the ringside at the lake arena Friday night to watch his protegee in action against McMillen.

In the semi-windup match handsome Juan Humberto who divides his time between rough riding on Hollywood movie lots in western screen thrillers, and wrestling against some of the best heavyweights in the sport, goes up against Bert Rubi, former Hungarian Olympic star.

In the other matches Bad Boy Brown returns to Lake county for the first time in three years to take on Cecil McGill of Texas, while Walter Palmer, former light-heavyweight amateur state champion, mixes with new-comer Jimmy Landis.

It is pretty generally agreed that the comedy gives Lillian Gish the most winning role of her distinguished film and stage career. As Vinnie, the sweet and tactful wife of blustering, autocratic Father Day—portrayed with superb skill by Percy Waram—Miss Gish is a constant delight. The four red-headed sons, portrayed by O. Z. Whitehead, Peter Jamerson, Jimmy Roland and Harlan Stone, also score with outstanding performances.
