

MISCHA ELMAN WILL DISPLAY RARE VIOLINS

Celebrated Artists To Play Stradivarius In N. S. Series March 4

When Mischa Elman, celebrated artist, appears before the North Shore audience in Highland Park on March 4, under his chin will be one of three rare violins which he owns, whose aggregate value is almost $100,000. The violinist does not believe his instruments should be treated as rare museum pieces, preferring to keep them all in constant use. He thinks that a good violin becomes better with use as well as age.

The greybeard of the trio is a Stradivarius (1717) which is one of the three most prized violins in the world. It was presented to Mr. Elman by his wife, who purchased it in Paris.

A two-century old companion Stradivarius (1722) once was in the possession of Joseph Joachim when that venerable violinist and pedagogue pronounced Mischa to be a wonder-child. Mr. Elman's father presented it to his son on the occasion of his American debut many years ago.

The third violin is a 177 year-old Amati, a cherished possession which was given to Elman when he was only 12. The donor of this handsome gift was the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Stralitz, a relative of the Czar, who was profoundly moved by a concert presented by the youthful prodigy and made him this present.

Mr. Elman will appear in the auditorium of the Highland Park High school. The program, although one of the current North Shore Series, may be heard by non-subscribers to the course as well. Tickets are available at the Treasure Chest, 360 Central Ave.
