IT'S CHARLIE!

Bob Peddle grins as the "sandwich man" impersonates Charlie Chaplin in "The Great Dictator," as an advertisement for a neighborhood theatre.

Star Dust

SUSANNA FOSTER, the 16-year-old who sings C above high C, has appeared in two pictures, is being co-starred for the first time in Paramount's "Glamour Boy." Jackie Cooper is her leading man, and thrilled her to death recently when he came on the set with a huge box for her. It was a present, said he.

The box contained a set-chairs you know, one of those special chairs with a canvas back-rest that stars always have, with their names painted across the back. Susanna took one look at it and burst into tears. Her name had been spelled wrong! Not until a sign-painter had fixed it did she really feel like a star.

Joan Blondell and Binnie Barnes discovered a new way of reducing; in "Three Girls About Town" they had to drag Walter Soderling around—from one room to another, through hallways and down fire escapes. Each girl promptly lost five pounds, and it seemed likely that they'd be mere shadows by the time the picture was finished. Furthermore, the loss of weight began to show on the film. So the director, Sam Bischoff, had a dummy head made, with a face like Soderling's; now the girls are dummy-dragging.

It does seem as if the young people of Hungary would be so much upset at the moment to think of forming a fan club. But one Joseph Hamor wrote to Virginia Welder recently, from Budapest, to tell her a Virginia Welder club had been formed. The members wear badges bearing her picture, and are obliged to learn English. Virginia's honorary president.

Corp. James Stewart showed his family around the Metro lot the other day; Mr. and Mrs. Stewart and their daughters, Mary and Virginia, visited the sets of "Honky-Tonk" and "Smilin' Through" and had a chat with Clark Gable.

Laraine Day has been going on and on as Nurse Mary in the Kildare series—the latest is "Dr. Kildare's Wedding Day"—but she has the most important role of her career in "The New York Story," with Edward G. Robinson, Edward Arnold and Marsha Hunt.

RKO Radio received a nice, as a mummification not long ago; Adams, letter from Maj. Gen. Ethe United States army, says the most satirical Battalion picture produced to date.

Remedy which Charles Laughton "Ruggles of Red Gap," the Gettysburg address so effectively that he's been in demand to do it ever since? It's been re-issued, which is good news for everybody who missed this hilarious comedy the first time out, as well as for those who want to see it twice.

In Warner Bros. "The Maltese Falcon" Humphrey Bogart plays his first detective role—sort of a relief from gangsters. So he can play love scenes. He has one with Mary Astor that was a change for both of them; gangsters can't have true loves, under the producers' code, and as for Mary, she said that the last time she'd been really kissed was in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Speaking of the beautiful Miss Astor, she certainly stacked up laurels for herself in "The Great Lie," playing opposite Bette Davis. If you want to realize what excellent character portrayals the girls gave, see the picture on a double bill with one of those phony B pictures that Hollywood turns out.

Those who loathe the commercials mixed into their radio programs will hail with delight the announcement that the FCC has granted a permit to Muzak Inc., to build a station in New York that will carry absolutely no advertising.

ODDS AND ENDS—Margaret Lindsay signed to appear in four more of Columbia's Ellery Queen pictures. . . Victor McLaglen ended his personal appearance tour because "The Marines Are Ready" was ready. . . Jack Benny will make "The Widow WOULD'S Weep" for Warners when he returns from his vacation in September. . . Richard Travis, cast opposite Bette Davis in "The Man Who Came to Dinner," owes his big chance to her recommendation after seeing his test. . . Bob Hope's bad sunburn held up "Louisiana Purchase" . . . ZaSu Pitts will flutter her hands in RKO's "Week End for Three" . . .

Young Man About Town

By WHITT N. SCHULTZ

She's a Highland Park! Macaulay once said: "In after life you may have friends—fond, dear friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you which none but a mother bestows."

How true this is. And, how well it depicts the sincerity and the deep love shown by Mrs. Highland Parker towards her children. . . To her, nothing comes before her family—EVER! . . . Maybe that is why Highland Park has so many outstanding people. . . She might be compared with Mrs. Day in "Life With Father"; she's kind, gentle, and considerate. . . Is she pretty? Yes, decidedly so. . . She has exquisite taste in clothes, and she considers Marshall Field's the old family stand-by. . . She's a peacemaker—her home invariably running smoothly, without unnecessary bickerings. . . She also reads the New York Times. That is, she reads the society section, the book review section, and last—but not least!—the advertisements of the smart Fifth Avenue shops. . . Frequently she orders clothes from Bonwit's or Bergdorf Goodman's. . . Yes, she has a charge account. Several in fact. And, she uses them quite freely. . . Sometimes she feels a little guilty after she has bought that expensive hat. But then. . . She walks up to the "village" each day, for she enjoys walking, and she likes to select the food that she is going to have served. . . She has a maid, and her maid loves her. . . A snappy automobile is frequently hers. . . She's a charming hostess and a brilliant entertainer. . . Yes, she went to college. In the East most likely, Vassar, Smith, or Wellesley.

She's a member of the Woman's club—and if you want to see her at her best and at her prettiest, go someday to a meeting of the Woman's club. I did. I was pleasantly convinced. . . She smokes occasionally—but not much. . . Rarely does she even sip a strong drink. . . She's a cracker-jack card player, and often she brings home the coveted first prize. . . Every once in a while she takes a quick swim at the club. . . She might play a little golf, too. . . After Mr. and Mrs. Macaulay got to play a half-way decent game for her exacting husband. And, besides, it's a good way to walk off a few extra pounds. . . She enjoys lessons. . . She's a constant builder of good will. And, at the beginning of each day, she sends each member of her family off with a bright, cheery smile. . . She has a keen sense of humor. . . She hates the first of the month when the bills come—and who doesn't? . . . She has trouble keeping her checking account accurate; that is, as accurate as her particular husband's. She is an excellent cook and on Thursdays she really has a field day! . . . She loves flowers. Working in her garden is one of her highest pleasures. Lovely bouquets are seen in every room of her orderly house. . . She likes to dance—but she doesn't dance enough. . . She's soft-spoken. . . Politics bore her. The Draft frightens her. . . She's a loyal church-goer, and a guild member. She is an idealist. . . Her popularity has grown as her years have slipped peacefully by. . . The Reader's Digest appeals to her because by reading it she can get a lot of information about a lot of things in a big hurry. . . Yes, she's high-strung—but not nervous! . . . She loves her son because he is so much like his father. . . Of course she thinks her daughter is a beautiful girl—and she frequently is! . . . She spends weeks and sometimes months selecting the best finishing school and best summer reading, delving primarily into lighter fiction. . . Katherine Brush amuses her. . . She reads with delight the many stories that appear in the Saturday Evening Post. . . She's a USO'er—and she keeps that cookie jar always full. . . Secretly she wishes that she were the president of the Woman's club—but then she realizes the duties are extremely heavy and that she has a family to raise. . . She doesn't wear much make-up—she doesn't have to. . . Her husband always takes her to the best hotels and the best theatricals. . .

She's interested in football for her son usually wins a starting position on HPHS's football team. . . She always helps her children with their camp for her daughter. . . Indeed, she's gentle, patient, thoughtful, sympathetic, and so understanding. . . Mark my words: she is tops, this Mrs. Highland Parker!
Editor's Note: Next week Whitt N. Schultz will write his concluding article on the Ravinia Festival.
