

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—We are quite certain that there is a chipping sparrow out our way which didn't stand still long enough to be counted, but at any rate Roger Peterson's Count Tory Peterson's national bird count of 5,750,000,000 receives respectful, even admiring attention, and no challenges or quibbles about it.

At the age of 26, Mr. Peterson proved that bird lore can be made to yield a lot more than mere bird seed. That was in 1934, when he published his book, "Field Guide to the Birds." As bird books go it was a best-seller, warmly praised not only by the somewhat esoteric cull of bird-fanciers, but by a much wider public, which appreciated its clarity and simplicity.

He not only writes but illustrates his books, having emerged from the New York Art Students' league as a highly qualified decorative artist. He is known as the best American authority on field identification of birds.

Mr. Peterson had an adventure at the convention of the society at Cape May last year, which, so far as we can learn, was not picked up by the news hawks at the time. It seems a group of ornithologists, Peterson included, got up at 4:30 to clock a scheduled hawk migration. It didn't come off and all were downhearted until a rumor got around that a black-necked stilt had been seen near the lighthouse pond. There had been no stilt in this section since 1870.

The party set out for the spot. Finally far across the pond, inaccessible to any dry land approach, the bird was sighted. Mr. Peterson said it would be necessary to approach as near as possible, disturb the bird, and then observe its flight carefully. He and William Fish volunteered to brave the mud and cold. They waded in, and at times were up to their armpits in slimy mud. Finally Peterson waded his arms at the stilt. It didn't move. Approaching nearer, they discovered it was as stiff as a plank.

The convention finally ran down the story. The National Academy of Sciences at Philadelphia had had a housecleaning and heaved out a lot of stuffed birds. Some rival bird fans of the Delaware valley had retrieved the stilt and set it up across the pond.

UP IN Maine, on last summer's holiday, this writer talked with an old road-side philosopher who was concerned with problems arising from the lengthening life-span in New England.

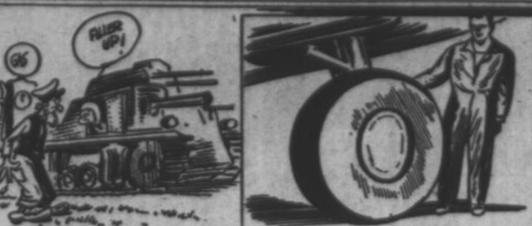

Prof. Perry Boldly Trumpets an 'Old Age Movement'

"They don't do much dyin' up here," he said. "Down at West Newton, they had to shoot an old feller, just to start a graveyard." Professor Ralph Barton Perry, of the faculty of philosophy of Harvard University, is similarly concerned about old age, but for a different reason. In a brilliant essay in a recent issue of the Princeton Alumni Weekly, he rallies the oldsters against being "hustled around by their juniors in politics; he notes the capitulation of wise old age to bumptious youth, and challenges Rabbi Ben Ezra by insisting that there's no use growing old with him, or anybody else, if old-age is to be merely a tolerated short-cutter in the life sweepstakes.

"The most striking evidence of the downfall of the aged," writes Professor Perry, "is to be found in the domestic circle."

"The authority of the father was first broken by the mother, and the children poured through the breach. The last remnant of paternal authority was the period in which the father was an ogre, who came home at the end of the day to deal with major offenses. He was no longer magistrate, only executioner.

Milwaukee Fetes Sheridan Soldiers

Three blocks of homes in Milwaukee opened their doors to 100 soldiers of Fort Sheridan in a mass demonstration of home hospitality Sunday, November 9.

The housewives of the three blocks, the 4300 and 4400 on North Street and the 4300 on 25th, served dinners in their homes. Afternoon entertainment followed in the Richard Street Armory, with community singing, dancing, interviews over Radio Station WTMJ, and a buffet supper scheduled. Mayor Carl Zeidler welcomed the soldiers. Two orchestras provided the music.

A smaller group of 16 soldiers were entertained at dinner by eight families on 49th Street, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Rose Zeid, 2745 North 49th Street. This group joined the 100 for the afternoon party in the Armory.

Louis D. As a liberal he enlarged the scope of mankind's thinking. As a social worker he pioneered in the labors on behalf of the underprivileged and the needy. As a lawyer he enriched the concept of American law and changed its course from the impersonal to the personal and warm kind of justice bent on making the world happier for all the children of men.

Services are held at North Shore Congregation Israel every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and visitors are always cordially welcome. The Temple is located at the corner of Lincoln and Verman Avenues in Glencoe.
