WHO'S NEWS This Week

By Leland F. Parton

NEW YORK—Having shown how to draft the weather for the duration of this biggest war, F. N. Reichelderfer is tendered a nice plum. At its recent annual dinner in New York the Institute of Aeronautical Sciences handed him the Losey Award for outstanding contributions to the science of meteorology.

Weather is war's most uncertain factor. Not even the great captains from Bellairius on to Stonewall Jackson (and Time-shenka) could win if it blew too hard against them. And it is the belief of Reichelderfer that tacticians take it too little into account. Chief, now, of the United States weather bureau, he would have a weather forecaster with every naval and military unit on its own. There aren't enough military forecasters for this, yet, but Reichelderfer is buttonholing all the generals and admirals.

Forty-seven years old, the bureau chief is sharp-nosed, lean, baldish and square-jawed. By the time he had a science degree from Northwestern university he was sure weather was his dish, and he did extra studying in Norway. The navy got him in 1918 and for 20 years he was about its most weatherwise officer. . . . aviator, aerologist and finally commander. He spent a lot of time at the naval air station in Lakehurst, N. J., until he quit the service for the bureau.

He is married and has a son. After years of wisecracks from disappointed picnicers he understands the risks of prophecy. "I doubt," he said a while back, "if many know how brave the weather forecaster is who steps up to a survey map and makes a forecast for tomorrow." When the fate of a battle hangs on the forecast you can bet your bottom dollar he is brave.

THERE is a little (well, not too big) smoke-filled (sometimes) room off the senate chamber in Washington where politicians are gathering this year as Lawmakers Check Shooting Irons at Col. Halsey's Door these ten past. So far, however, no one has charged against the sinister schemes laid to the traditional smoke-filled little room where politicians gather. It is the office of Col. Edwin A. Halsey, just confirmed as secretary of the senate for his tenth term.

A senate secretary is supposed to tote up the senate's bills and see that they are paid, even to the bill for the polish put on the vice president's official automobile. He is supposed also to disburse salaries, supervise the printing of legislative bills and keep all records.

Colonel Halsey does these things but he also serves as a suave broad-shouldered steering committee of one for new members and as a friendly confidant for new and old. He worked up to his present job from a bottom start. A page boy in 1897 when a senator-uncle beckoned him off a Virginia farm, he was a master of pages and an assistant sergeant-of-arms before reaching his present pleasant singularity.

Report has it that very neat inter-party shennanigans are figured out in the colonel's office for it is a neutral ground on which Democrats and Republicans meet unarmed. About this, however, no outsider can say for sure because matters discussed there are not tipped off elsewhere. Except, perhaps, some innocent bit of senate history. The secretary carried a vast store of that between his ears. And, of course, the secretary's golf score. Like any golfer, he will talk of that till kingdom come.

A STUTE is the word for Adolf Augustus Berle, assistant secretary of state, who plans in secret with aviation experts of the government on a Child Prodigy Who Didn't Peter Out program. Most infant prodigies peter out about the time they bid their teachers good-by. But it isn't only in the telephone directory that A.A.B. continues to stand close to the top for all that he was a Harvard Phi Beta Kappa at 18 and had two more degrees when he could vote. His best line is corporation finance but he steps over it readily.

Lately his out-of-bound activities have included a call to Italy to revolt; a prediction that this hemisphere will lead the world after the war, and a judicial suggestion that the world adopt a system of finance based upon our Federal Reserve system. His photographs sometimes hint at an amiable superiority but this could be only the erudite abstraction of a man able to think up the profound thoughts that must lurk between the covers of books bearing titles like, "New Directions in the New World."
