"But there's already an extension telephone where we're moving. Why can't we have it?"

WAR has brought on a critical shortage in telephones. This means that all available instruments must be distributed fairly to as many people desiring service as possible.
The War Production Board has ruled that no new extension telephones can be installed in residences.
Also under this order, we must remove all extensions from vacated residences, even when the new tenants ask for this extra service.
This makes it possible to install just that many more main telephones... thus furnishing service for some who otherwise would have to do without.
