"Good Night Ladies!" was born on Hoping, as only a mother could, the Pacific Coast in February, 1942, That He Who had a Son, too, underscored a triumph in its premiere run in San Francisco and descended on Chicago six weeks later to shatter every known long-run record in the city's history. Before it was a month home of Mrs. Elizabeth Delhaye, Milwau- old every play booker in the country was bidding for the attraction, the press had proclaimed it as the "surprise hit" over a twenty-two-year period, and capacity business was its reward solidly through its first summer season at the Blackstone.

Seventeen months after its debut the Chicago critics, returning to view Stuart Erwin's replacement of Buddy Ebsen, acclaimed the farce as fully twice as sensational as their original opinions discussion; had asserted. Erwin took over the role the play was aborning in Los Angeles, 8 p.m., Evening worship at Lake Forest the play was aborning in Los Angeles, in the American Legion hall, McKinley and had commenced rehearsals with co-star Gallagher when a film commitment forced him to withdraw.

Producers Howard Lang and Al Rosen favor a season on the road in metropolitan cities within the middle west where they realize the spectacular success of the farce is well known.
