

DEEPS and SHALLOWS

Here's How! Thirty dawns have made way since W-day, And on this anniversary, we Toast a girl and a guy—here is mud in your eye!

A round little "Joe," with an arrow and bow, And apparently not much to wear, Formed a task force of one—and did he have fun

The time-honored dart caught the boy in the heart, Though he'd previously shied at the halter, He was done for he knew—and without more ado Rushed his honey chile straight to the altar.

The bride, young and fair, was a victim of "scare," And shook till her teeth seemed to rattle, But the rugged marine, in his outfit of green, Carried on as he'd learned to in battle.

Yes, the story's the same—just a change in the name— And as trite as the veriest fossil; It's as old as the sun—but it's still being done— And each time it occurs it's colossal!

Song of the Suburbs

Sing "Ho!" to the couples, The dear household couples Who work in the suburbs for pay. If wife is lazy The hubby's a daisy, Or perhaps it's the other way.

Each Monday they enter, From some servant center; On Tuesday you find he's a crook. On Wednesday they're leaving And you are not grieving; But, my dear, how the woman could cook!

Has some one a room, or A shack sans a broom, or A dugout the size of a gnat? Just send me a line: I've a house simply fine I'll exchange at the drop of a hat.

—Buddy Bligh.

Well, Does It?

A little neighbor boy broke some windows. His conscientious mother decided that he should be taught his lesson on his very first offense.

"After school you and I will go to the lady, and pay for the broken windows out of your savings," she said.

"But, Mother, I don't need to pay!"

"Why not, Junior?" "Why all the movies keep saying, 'Crime Never Pays!'"
