

DEEPS and SHALLOWS

The Stars Look Down
The stars look down from larkspur skies
Where woolly clouds, like a gown,
Shield their nudity from our eyes...

Over cities of high renown,
And cross-strewn field where a soldier lies,
The stars pour their benediction down.

The soul, though serene in peace,
Still sighs
For desolate homes in country and town;
While those tireless sentinels of the skies—
The stars—look down.

Peace Comes to California (V-J Night Incident)

A soldier and a sailor met on the sidewalk. Said the sailor to the soldier, "Hello Soldier"—Said the soldier to the sailor, "Hello Sailor." Then they embraced.

Coming to a corner they stopped to look at an old man who was trying to sell his papers to the passing crowd, but no one paid any attention.

The sailor and soldier held a consultation — then one grabbed a bunch of papers and began selling them.

Said the sailor to the soldier, "Where do we go from here?" Said the soldier to the sailor, "Let's find some other old chap who needs help."

Did you see anyone celebrating V-J day in that way?
—ALMA C. OLESEN.

Tea for One

Alone I sit
And sip my tea;
I dream of you
Eternally.

It's been so long
Since you were here...
Do you sip tea
Alone, my dear?
—E.M.K.

Pennance

Sackcloth and ashes
Must I wear;
But there's a rose
Tucked in my hair.

The Little Man Who Isn't There

(Apologies to Reader's Digest)
According to post war release,
The Germans always wanted peace.
They love mankind — the whole creation —
This kindly, pious, docile nation.
At mention of the dread name,
"Nazis,"
They hide their faces in their hatses.

"I would that wars should cease I would the globe from end to end Might sow and reap in peace, And some new spirit o'erbear the old."—Tennyson.

Peace is ours — a wonderful and almost unbelievable thing. Amidst all rejoicing, however, comes the sobering thought that peace has been earned at a high cost, and that it must be our responsibility to keep it.

Untold suffering and bottomless grief, heroism and sacrifice have been everyday happenings to people in many a country during these years. And side by side with the men and women who have fought this death struggle, have stood the children of fighting countries— as heroes and as victims.

Coming through!

Thousands and thousands of service men are passing through Ft. Sheridan these days. Many of them are just back from overseas. It's the first chance they've had in months to talk to the home folks—and that's the first thing most of them want to do.

by not doing something! It's as simple as this: PLEASE LEAVE LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE LINES FREE FROM 7 TO 10 EVERY EVENING. Long Distance lines are busier than ever. We know you'll want to help the boys get their calls through promptly. It's so easy to do and it may mean so much!
