A Scientist Makes a Startling Statement

A prominent scientist recently made a startling statement which calls for a forthright reply. He said that since the "political specialists" had failed to put the world in order, it would be necessary for him and his fellow scientists to take a hand. That government should be left to some kind of elite corps is a notion which dies hard. Since the divine right of kings went out of fashion, there have always been those who hoped wishfully for some more competent source of authority removed from the common man. The harder, more mature idea that every man should bear the responsibility for government — the idea we call democracy — is only dimly realized 170 years after the Declaration of Independence.

The scientist made a wrong assumption. He assumed that "political specialists" invent and put into operation superior mechanisms of government. Nothing could be further from the truth. Political "scientists" may classify, describe and define the political process, but with rare and minor exceptions, they have not invented new mechanisms and made them work. They have had no special grant of power to carry out their ideas. Moreover, the political specialist is not exempt from the duty of exercising his judgment on many problems outside his specialty, even as any other man.

Institutions of government evolve from the experience of the people. Changes are instituted by practical men of affairs at critical junctures. Of the two possible bases of government, force or consent, we had hoped we were moving toward higher and higher levels of consent. We had hoped we were making progress in government by the people.

Our reply to the scientist is: "Where have you been all of these years? If your alibi was that you did not wish to clutter your mind by considering issues which could not be settled in the physical laboratory, it doesn't sound reasonable in a world that has been ravished by facism. Government by the people is a practical art which all must practice." (Part of a letter to the local League from the national League president.)

Noted Speakers at Green Bay - Elm Place Joint Meeting January 23

Green Bay PTA, which will meet Jan. 23, at 8:15 p.m., at the Green Bay auditorium, will combine at that time with Elm Place PTA to hear Dr. and Mrs. Garry Cleveland Myers, editor-in-chief and associate editor of CHILDREN'S ACTIVITIES MAGAZINE, who will be the speakers of the evening. Everybody interested is welcome to attend.

This well-known twosome has probably appeared before more groups of people interested in child welfare than any other couple in the United States. They travel together, and during the school years 1940-1944 they appeared before local, state and national groups in nearly every state in the Union, their audiences aggregating 358,792 persons.

Experienced as writers, editors, teachers, counsellors and public speakers, they are well versed on all subjects pertaining to child well-being. Both have taught in elementary, high school and university levels, prior to devoting full time to CHILDREN'S ACTIVITIES.

"A ROBERT RIPLEY"

Every returning GI is mighty glad to see his family again, but few are so vociferous in their greetings as was Soldier Frank Chlan of Baltimore. He gave his mom a hug so big that it snapped several of her ribs.

In Toledo, Mrs. Margaret Cook's car blew a tire at a railroad crossing and careened down the tracks toward an approaching freight train. The auto struck a signal switch and threw a red block against the train, automatically stopping it.

One of life's little mysteries to doctors and economists came when 17-month-old Larry Lingle of Harrisburg, Pa., swallowed a nickel and coughed up a penny.

Mrs. Edward Comfort of Brooklyn was driving through Virginia, her 15-month-old baby riding happily beside her in a basket strapped to the seat of the car. So far as Mrs. Comfort knew, there were no hard feelings between her and the baby. But the child suddenly stopped contentedly drinking milk out of a nursing bottle, swung the bottle lustily and conked Mrs. Comfort neatly on the head. Dazed, she let go of the wheel and the car overturned in a ditch. No, neither mother nor baby was hurt.

Not so allergic to a thump on the head is Charles Anderson, a hardy resident of Los Angeles. Mr. Anderson, in fact, has reason to regard himself as practically indestructible. He was repairing a wall one day when a concrete block fell from a fourth-story scaffold and hit him smack on the head. He reeled into the street, just in time to be struck down by Policeman Jess Haenel's motorcycle. He recovered satisfactorily from both accidents.

Taxi Driver Ethel Sheffield's cab skidded into a lamp post in Regina, Saskatchewan, one 16-be-zero night last January. She was knocked unconscious and might have frozen to death if a fire alarm box on the lamp post hadn't been set off by the crash, bringing firemen to the rescue.

Discharged veterans who were not registered to vote before they entered service have until March 11 to register with their local county clerks, Secretary of State Edward J. Barrett has advised.

This applies, the secretary said, to veterans who may not have registered under the permanent registration prior to their entrance into service and also to persons who became of voting age while in the service.

Veterans who changed their permanent address and former members of the women's military services who have changed their names through marriage also were reminded to revise their registration. The deadline for making these requirements for veterans these changes is March 12.

One exception to the registration requirements for veterans applies to those who will be discharged within sixty days prior to an election. In these cases, Barrett explained, the discharged veteran may cast his vote on election day by making an affidavit to election officials at the polls on election day.

Those still in military service need not be registered to vote, but they must make application for their ballots directly to the county clerk in their county.

Barrett said that copies of the 1946 primary and election calendar may be obtained by writing his office.

Red Cross Appeals For Music Instructors

Generous contributors have donated accordions, guitars, saxophones, clarinets, double basses, trombones, violins and pianos thru the Red Cross Camp and Hospital committee. But these instruments won't have the use for which they were intended unless hospitalized servicemen can be taught to play them. That's why the Chicago chapter Red Cross Camp and Hospital committee is appealing for music instructors to volunteer to teach patients at Vaughan general hospital to use these instruments. Such instruction will help the hospitalized servicemen to pass the time more pleasantly, and will give them lifetime hobbies.

Teachers experienced in both individual and group instruction are needed for morning, afternoon and evening teaching periods.

Come to Red Cross headquarters, 529 S. Wabash, room 400, for interview Mondays thru Fridays, 9 to 5, or Saturdays, 9 to 12:45, if you would like to help with this teaching program.
