Housing Situation

am also told that some stores could have a second floor added for apartments, but the space necessary for parking cars to keep them off the streets and other requirements discourage business men from making these additions.

Highland Park should be a city of homes, and there is room for thousands of them in the empty spaces within the corporate limits. However, the transportation situation forces people to live near the railroad stations.

What can Highland Park do to meet the housing situation?
Under the present zoning laws, encouragement could be given to investors and contractors to build apartments in zones where that is possible.

The zoning laws should be revised to permit construction of apartments over places of business, without the restrictions of space for parking autos, and distance back from the street.

Health and building laws should be enforced requiring owners of buildings to provide better living conditions in many instances. Where buildings are beyond repair, they should be torn down and the material used for other construction.

We should be human about the whole matter. If we can help someone else who needs a home, everything should be done to make that possible. None of us should be selfish.

Men's Republican Club Elects Members and Hears Karl Mundt

Russia doesn't have the atomic bomb. She lacks military equipment, her navy is inadequate and the aviation equipment is out of date.

Mr. Mundt said he wished that just President Truman and Stalin could get together with Truman telling Stalin to "write his own ticket, but in doing so the rules shall apply in both directions. If Russia is to be in on the control of Japan, we shall be in on the Balkan settlements; if they have consulates in this country, we shall have consulates in Russia; if they have second class mailing privileges here, we shall have them in Russia; if they can go about at will in this country, then we shall travel the same way in their country."

Valuable time has been wasted and the United States must act quickly, he concluded.

LET'S SWAP!

Did you ever think much about an American cigarette? Did you know it contains, besides American tobacco, other tobacco and ingredients imported from a dozen other countries?

Consider the automobile — Did you know that 300 different products from 56 different countries go into them?

Then there's the telephone — 18 of the 37 most important materials used in its making are from outside the country.

Other countries want our cars, our machinery to rebuild their bombed out factories and farms, bridges and railways. They also want our chewing gum and candy bars, our mechanical refrigerators and our handy gadgets.

The needs are unlimited — food, cotton, soap, radios. American factories can meet all our needs and still have a surplus ready for sale abroad.

Our farmers can turn out at least twice as much cotton, half again as much tobacco, and much more wheat and pork products than we can use in this country.

It is only common sense to trade our extra goods for the things we need from abroad. The same is true of other countries.

One thing is clear, however, we can hope to increase our sales abroad only if other countries are prosperous. They cannot buy from us, if we will not buy from them. If we want to increase our exports, we must, then, see what can be done to increase imports.

For years the American tariff has been among the highest in the world. What are tariffs? They are a tax charged other countries for the privilege of selling certain goods in this country, for example. They are supposed to protect certain industries in this country against competition from abroad.

Yet, we have discovered in this country that competition develops the best product — by its stimulation we have become the greatest industrial nation in the world. Competition produces more jobs, not less. Why should we fear it?

What would happen if we had tariffs between our states? We have just as great differences in wages and living conditions between different parts of this country as there are between this country and other countries. Obviously our industrial development would be slowed down and crippled.

It is apparent that our high standards of living have developed because of free competition. Cannot this be true of the world at large?

The industries that produce goods for sale abroad are the high wage industries. The secret of their efficiency in many instances, is mass production. And mass production is made possible by a huge domestic market. The automobile industry is an excellent example. The wages are much higher than in competing countries. Yet with high wages, America can produce better cars more cheaply than any other country in the world. The more we specialize the better off we are.

What can we do to help bring prosperity to the world and in its wake peace, as well? Prosperous America can help put the world on its feet by its demand for foreign goods.

We must re-examine our trade policies and keep restrictions only where absolutely necessary. Our first attack should be on tariffs that are without economic justification.

Lowering our trade barriers would encourage other countries to follow our lead and would strengthen world unity.

If we and the rest of the world are to enjoy the full benefits of mass production and the advantages of specialization, with its consequent rise in the standard of living, we must all increase the amount of trading or swapping between the United States and the other nations of the world. Let's get together! — (The foregoing was submitted by the League of Women Voters and does not necessarily reflect the views of The Press.)
