At Eight O'clock — Doors will open at 7:00

Where does your telephone wire go?

It goes from your telephone ...

to the outside of your house and to a nearby pole ...

down the street to a junction box ...

connecting it to cable beneath the ground ...

through a vast amount of intricate equipment ...

to a switchboard or dial switching system and to more than 27 million other telephones all over the country.

A telephone instrument is only a small fraction of the equipment needed to provide service for each telephone.

This figure grows bigger year after year, as the telephone system grows in size and complexity.

In Illinois Bell territory, there's $204.68 worth of equipment and property behind each telephone served.

It takes a lot of plant, property and people to provide good telephone service. It takes a lot of dollars, too.
