Young Highland Parker Saves Lives of Two Chicagoans

Michael Farrel, 15-year-old member of the Highland Park high school track team, covered himself with glory by saving the lives of two people at an unguarded point on the beach, July 4th. Those rescued are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Knowlton, 26 and 25, respectively, who experienced a very close call about 200 yards out at the Vine avenue beach.

Edward and William Knowlton, of 3744 Wabansia, Chicago, brothers, and both employees of the N. Y. Central railroad, with their wives, Therese and Mary, were spending the day at the beach. William had just towed Theresa, who cannot swim, to a sandbar 200 yards out. Mary, William's wife, on following, was taken with a cramp half way to the bar. Leaving Theresa, William rescued his wife, although he, also, suffered a cramp from the cold water in so doing.

Left alone on the bar, Theresa called for help, and her husband, Edward, swam to her, but before reaching the bar he was also seized with a cramp.

Standing on the beach was Michael with his 8-year-old brother, Patrick. Stripping to his underwear, Michael swam to the aid of the Edward Knowltons. By grasping Mrs. Knowlton with one arm, urging Edward to cling to her and keep afloat, and swimming with the other arm, Michael finally brought the couple to shore. Knowlton, at times only partially conscious, was aided by a life preserver thrown out by his brother.

None except Edward was the worse for the experience, and he recovered after an hour's treatment for exhaustion at the Highland Park hospital.

Former Highland Parker Gives World Latest Armored War Monster

Years ago, when the automobile industry was in its infancy, a 7-year-old boy watched his father build the first armored car, called by newspapers an "autogun." It weighed 900 pounds and could travel 15 miles an hour on its three wheels. No doubt the lad was thinking: "Some day I'll build a car, too — a much bigger and better one even than that."

Forty-five years later he did that very thing. Highland Parkers, renew acquaintance with two former fellow-citizens — A. G. MacPherson and his son, E. S. MacPherson. The latest thing in armored motors, designed by the latter, weighs 14 tons and travels 55 miles an hour — and, incidentally, runs on four wheels.

Those forty-five intervening years are fraught with world-shaking events, and dotted with important names. Among those names, four stand out, as related to the auto industry.

On Thanksgiving day, 1895, Charles E. Duryea won the first American auto race in Chicago. At that time he developed a new three-wheeled "motor carriage," which made, he thought, for easier driving.

Then there was R. P. Davison, major in the Illinois National Guard, who was also superintendent of a military academy near Chicago. He formed his cadets into a military bicycle corps, and when he heard of the new three-wheeler, he conceived the idea of mounting a gun on it, as a speedy means of transportation. This resulted in what was called by newspapers an "armored car" and sometimes a "motor gun."

When model No. 3 was built along these lines, A. G. MacPherson was the designer. But, like early "auto wagons," No. 3 was a flop. A. G. tried again, this time with his son to help. This late model ran by steam, and A. G. himself drove it to Washington.

When A. G. accepted a dealership in Cadillac, Major Davison became a Cadillac enthusiast, and soon had A. G. mounting machine guns on the Cadillac job. His son was becoming more and more helpful. A whole military train was constructed, consisting of a reconnaissance car, two wireless cars, a field kitchen, a field hospital with x-ray, a balloon destroyer, a supply car — and a real armored car. It was exhibited at the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco in 1915.

With World War I there came a lapse in the development of military motorized vehicles. Major Davidson and A. G. MacPherson dropped from the picture and E. S. MacPherson became more prominent.

Moving to Detroit in 1915, E.S. became associated with the engineering department of the Chalmers Motor Car Co., and later was captain in the newly-created air corps in World War I.

Later on he became associated with the Liberty Motor Co., then the Hupp Motor Co., and in 1934 he became Chevrolet's engineer of design. When World War II broke, the British, needing a speedy, high-power armored car for desert use, came to the War department, to General Motors, to Chevrolet... and to E. S. MacPherson, son of the builder of armored car Model No. 1. It was he who gave them the modern, up-to-date monster now in existence.

"... the world will make a beaten path to his door."

CHILD WALKING IN PATH OF CAR IS INJURED

Walking from behind some bushes, James Jensen, 2½ year-old son of the Kenneth Jensens, 1896 Pleasant, was struck by the rear wheel of a car driven by Mrs. Matt Maiman, who was backing from her adjacent driveway at 1810 Pleasant, on June 25. Mrs. Maiman drove with him to the hospital where it was found that the child suffered a fractured hip.

In the first night game played under the lights, the teen age softball fans who turned out to see the game between Fred's Inn and Neild's Juniors were surprised at the caliber of play these boys put out. Neild's won a thrilling game, 7 to 4, behind the 4-hit pitching of Mel Harder. Enzo Nannini catching for Fred's Inn, performed remarkably well behind the plate, catching 4 men trying to steal second.

This fact plus a couple of nice double plays, kept Neild's from running up the score. Don Moorehead allowed 7 hits. Harder struck out 6 men and Moorehead 5. Both pitchers walked two men.

These two teams are part of a six-team league which plays every Monday and Wednesday at 7 p.m., with an occasional game under lights. A full schedule will be announced at a later date.

Scores of last week's games are: Highwood Boys' club 14, Atom Bombers 10, Hexes 11, Rexfords 10, Fred's Inn 3, Hexes 1.

Fred's Inn Wins In Kitten Ball

Going in to the last inning, Duffy's were trailing 8-7, but came forward to win the game by scoring two runs in their half of the inning. Fell's with some new players now look like a good contender for first place. Scores of last week's games are: Duffy's 9, Invaders 8, Elm Place 5, V.F.W. 4, Fell's 11, Moose 1.
