

Deep and Shallows

Three Pictures

The sun sets slowly in our western sky,
Leaving in its trail a wisp of light;
The heavens darken gradually, and then
The wisp becomes a sliver of a moon.

A few nights later in our western sky
A golden crescent hangs, at rakish slant,
Predicting, so the prophets wise declare,
Rain before the time the moon comes full.

And only last night, in our western sky,
A-sail through cloudless realm, the magic moon
Enhanced fresh beauties never dreamed before . . .
The clinging shadows — oh, how black they were. —A.C.O.

The Lion's Share

Have you pondered how and where
Was coined the phrase, "The lion's share"?

A jackal, wolf and fox were friends
With the lion — when it served their ends;
And one fine day, this foursome strange
In company set out to range
For food; and an unlucky stag
Fell victim to the game of tag.

With jaws agape, each hungry beast
With famished eyes devoured the feast,
But ventured not to raise a paw
Until their king proclaimed the law.

"Divide it," roared the mighty one,
And in a second it was done.
The lion nodded sagely, and
Before the kill took royal stand.

"First share is mine — you will agree
It's mine in my capacity

As king of beasts, and I assign
The second portion, too, as mine;
That's fair, you will concede, I feel,
Because I arbitrate the deal.

"The third is mine — an open case,
For I assisted in the chase . . .
This quarter is the fourth and last—
Just come and get it — if you dast!"

And thus, my friends, right then and there
Was born the phrase, "The lion's share."

N'est Ce Pas?

I've learned to know myself this week—
And if you like, I'll let you peek;
My equilibrium's upset—
I find it easy to forget—
My cooking isn't worth its salt,
I'm nervous, touchy to a fault;
I cannot eat, I cannot sleep,
My state of mind is—well—not deep,
I can't remember traffic laws—
I seem to be "in Dutch" because I'm MOVING. —A.W.M.

Time Heals Hurt

Time flattens the flimsy
Beneath the heavy roll of years.
Thus die the words that hurt,
Among the cast off garments of the past.
And the good survives
Safe in the warehouse
Of the human mind
Running, running to the rear and forward
As a brakeman runs
From engine to caboose.

Gowned in white lace and carrying a prayer book to which gardenias were attached, the bride was given in marriage by her father.

The bride's sister, Minnie, was maid of honor and the bridesmaids were another sister, Lee, and Miss Jean Korasidas of Chicago. The white eyelet dresses worn by the girls were alike and they carried deep red roses.

The bridegroom's little cousin, Gloria Bruggioni, was a miniature of the other attendants as her dress and bouquet were exactly like theirs. She is the daughter of the John Bruggionis of 317 Grove.

Best man was Alfonso Rizzolo and the ushers were Sargo Diagnani of Highwood and Siv Cordini of Glencoe.

The bride's mother wore a white eyelet dress and her corsage was of red carnations. Taking his mother's place in the receiving line was his cousin's wife, Mrs. John Bruggioni. She was dressed in pink and black print, and her corsage was of white carnations.

HOW MANY RETURNING VETERANS GO BACK TO THEIR OLD JOBS?

We don't know what the figures are for all companies. But Illinois Bell Telephone Company is rather proud of this one—
More than 98 per cent of our men discharged from the Armed Forces have come back to Illinois Bell.
We're glad to welcome them back—and glad they consider this a good place to work.
