

Deep and Shallows

Fall

Fall
Is the hustle and rustle
Of hurdling leaves
Tumbling along
Beneath the trees,
Singing the song of fall.

Fall
Is summer born fowl
Over the heather.
Cock pheasants strutting
Tails to the weather,
Singing the song of fall.

Fall
Is the golden corn
Tapping and rapping.
The shuffling husks
Blowing and laughing,
Singing the song of fall.

Fall is hope and promise
Of red and brown,
Of farms and cities
Settling down,
Singing the song of fall.

Which Way Does the Wind Blow?

Neither the well nor cistern pump has any special attraction for me. The well bucket I couldn't lift, and the cistern pump meant hard work. But when the well bucket holding the jar with buttermilk for the men's afternoon drink dropped to the bottom of the well, that was something to get excited about. And with two young uncles to answer questions while they were making repairs, here was an opportunity for research work.

But trying to peer down into the well from one side, I was in Uncle Chris' way, and if I tried the other side I was in Uncle Henry's way. After being gently pushed from one side to the other several times, I heard Uncle Chris ask Uncle Henry if he knew which way the wind blows when it starts at the North Pole.

Uncle Henry replied that the only wind he was interested in was the one which told him that there was a skunk around. Uncle Chris asked me if I knew. Worried more about the nearness of the skunk than about the direction of the wind, I was quite pleased when Uncle Chris told me to go to the cabin and ask Grandmother.

Grandma was shelling peas when I put my question, quite proud of myself because I remembered it correctly. A little bunch of wrinkles gathered on her forehead, as they always did when she was puzzled. But when I told her that Uncle Chris wanted to know, they disappeared, and a twinkle came into her brown eyes. But her face didn't smile a bit. She popped a big pod of peas and some went into the dish and the rest fell on the floor. Thinking that Grandmother never dropped peas when she shelled them, I picked some up, and standing up to ask her about it found her bending over on the other side. She thanked me and said, "I don't hear the hens cackling any more, so they must be through laying. Suppose we finish these peas and then go and gather the eggs."

Gathering eggs was the choicest of all the chores, and I forgot that my question had not been answered.

Some fifteen years later, when Uncle Chris came with his bride to visit us in Chicago, and many happenings of former days were being recalled, I remembered my unanswered question. I asked "Uncle Chris, which way does the wind blow when it starts from the North Pole?"

How he laughed. He came and put his arm around my shoulders and said: "Firefly, (that was his pet name for me as a child) in those days you were a lovable pest." I agreed and again he laughed heartily. Then he said:

"I'll answer your question by another. Could the wind blow in any direction except south?"

Dear reader, what is your answer?"

—A.C.O.

Yeah... What?

What good is a question without a reply?

Without any sweetheart, what use is a sigh?

What Christmas without Santa Claus is complete?

And what is a menu without any meat?

Creative Writers to Begin Autumn Session Thursday, Oct. 10

The autumn session of the North Shore Creative Writers commences Thursday, Oct. 10 with an all-day program at the YWCA. In the forenoon Mrs. Ruth T. McGibeny will direct routine class work. A luncheon at noon will be tendered by the board of directors.

Mrs. Mildred B. Haessler, president, will introduce the afternoon program, highlighted by Ben Kartman, editor of Coronet, a magazine devoted to non-fiction. He is the same gentleman who conducted the non-fiction workshop at the recent Midwest Writers' conference and who elicited such fulsome praise from the students en masse. As an editor, noted writer and critic he offers an unusual opportunity to writers in diversified fields. He will lecture and criticize, the pattern he utilized so effectively at the conference. Members whose specialty is non-fiction are requested to mail their manuscripts for Mr. Kartman's criticism to the program chairman, Mrs. I. M. Greenberg, 1329 Judson Avenue, Highland Park, not later than Oct. 5.

Of interest to non-fiction writers are Coronet's awards for an idea, and $50 for an anecdote. While none of our members won these prizes they scored heavily in all other departments.

The Midwestern Writers' conference is a non-profit organization brought into being by the North Shore Creative Writers initially directed by a former Ravinia resident, Rowena Bennett, a noted poetess and writer of juvenile fiction. The departments include non-fiction, drama, radio, poetry, juvenile fiction, short story and the novel. More than a score of literary groups cooperate with the conference. Its advisory council lists such names as Louis Bromfield, Mary Hastings Bradley, Vincent Saret and a host of others. Alice Manning Dickey, director, devotes all her faculties on devising methods of attracting and encouraging new writers. North Shore Creative Writers welcomes all who are interested.

Well-Known Missionary To Address Bible Class

The Women's Bible class, sponsored by the Highland Park Presbyterian Woman's association, will resume activities on Thursday morning, Oct. 10, at 10:30 in the Highland Park public library. The class is undenominational in character and a cordial invitation is extended to all women in the community interested in Bible history. Study will be on the book of Matthew.

Mrs. Arthur F. Tylee of Beverly Hills, Chicago, so popular during the past two seasons, will again lead the class.

Mrs. Tylee served as missionary for two years in Paraguay, S. A., and after her marriage to Mr. Tylee worked among the Nhamiquara Indians in Mato Grosso, Brazil. It was during an uprising of the natives, when medicine men laid blame for an epidemic of influenza upon the missionaries that her husband and 2-year-old son were killed. Mrs. Tylee, critically injured, recovered after her return to the States.

She served as deputation secretary for her mission board until 1935. Since, she has conducted women's bible classes in Joliet, Evanston, Winnetka and Racine, and has spent her summers in bible conference work with young people of the country.

Highland Park is fortunate in again securing the services of Mrs. Tylee.

The new rector of the Highland Park church is a graduate of Wake Forest college in North Carolina, Virginia Theological seminary, Lynchburg, and Union Theological seminary, New York City.

He was rector of All Saints' church in Roanoke, N. C., and was on the clerical staff of St. Bartholomew's, New York City. He assumed the pastorate of Trinity church, Roslyn, Long Island, New York, in 1940, and comes to Highland Park after six years with the New York church.
