This Month in Your Service BULLETIN

We decided that we could use some High Adventure. So we packed our bags and set off for the historical Land of Spice. We talked to People of All Ages. We saw the Primitive gent alleged to have discovered cinnamon. His remarks were highly aboriginal. We hurried on to Antiquity. It was Saturday night and the gamy ancients were basting themselves in perfume. That was the law. A vacationing crocodile revealed that "crocodile tears" were caused by a certain spice. "It does something to us," he said frankly. The Denizens of the Dark Ages said with enthusiasm "Spices make spoiled food taste REAL good." Slipping a cutlass between our teeth, we sailed through pirate-infested seas into the Age of Exploration. We darted into the Eighteenth Century to visit four thieves and to ogle the House of Parliament; We got a story and John McKee got sketches for CHRONICLE OF CONDIMENTS.
