IN MEMORIAM

I'll always remember Jim Friedman, or "Red" as all of his friends called him, as I last saw him a few hours before his fatal plane crash.

He had just flown in a few days before on a fruit cargo plane from Alaska, where he spent the summer. He looked the part of an Alaskan, as we think of one. Besides his 10 inch boots, blue jeans and windbreaker, he was sporting a red beard that matched his red hair.

We laughed and joked and talked of many things—his experiences in Alaska, our plans for school this fall, the beaches of Highland Park, our work on the Shoreline, the school paper, and other things that come up in a good old "bull" session. The talk swung around to all the different people he had met this summer and the new friends he expected to make this fall at school.

Red always seemed to want to meet people. And once he met them, he was their friend. He didn't have an enemy in the world. Older people, his contemporaries, and younger children all thought of him as a true friend.

While in high school, Red was always doing something for the school or somebody else—acting as master-of-ceremonies for a dance, selling tickets for a banquet, taking charge of Senior day, covering baseball, football, basketball and other sports for the Shoreline, of which he was the Sports Editor.

His classmates bestowed many honors on him at the end of the school year. He was voted as being the most likeable in the class, the most popular, and most congenial.

As president of band his senior year, he was thought of as the boy who could and would do anything for the band or the school. Even at the expense of his grades, he worked long hours arranging things and asking no credit for what he did.

On the football field he kept everybody in good spirits. He could always come up with a wisecrack when things were going the wrong way for the team.

As a cheerleader during the basketball season, he could really bring a volume of noise out of the crowd with his funny antics.

At home, at school, or whenever kids gathered Red was always there to entertain with jokes or piano playing. Some of his arrangements of well-known songs were really priceless, and the people who heard them always remembered them and asked him to play them over and over.

Red had a contagious personality that resulted in people being happier when he was around.

Several improvements to the school plant have been made during the summer months.

More than half of the playground has now been covered with blacktop so that play space is available in all weather. A new backstop is being erected by the Cyclone Fence Company and lines will be painted on the pavement for various games.

The Board has purchased a school bus to transport those pupils in the district who live at a distance. A garage is being completed at the north end of the school building to shelter the bus. To drive the bus, the Board has hired Domenic Romitti who will also help with maintenance work.

Through the efforts of the Oak Terrace P.T.A. and the graduating class of 1947, a three-channel Sound System has been installed in the school. This makes it possible to pick up an FM or AM radio program and pipe it to any or all rooms in the building. Any program from the stage or sound room may also be piped anywhere in the building. This will greatly aid English and Speech classes and will help coordinate the work of the school.

states, the Traffic Commission was unable to secure any decision other than verbal promise to give the matter further consideration. In the mean time he adds the North Shore with the recent reduction of service the number of through North Shore trains has been increased with the added hazard of trains passing the station without stopping at speeds up to 60 miles an hour.

This added hazard he explains, was made even more serious by the fact that the south bound platform at Beech Station is only 56 inches wide and there is only 25 inches of space between the bench and the edge of the platform which does not afford safe standing space for passengers even when trains pass at less than full speed. In consequence with the change of schedule the further recommendation was made that at least part of the platform be widened at least 36 inches and the Northwestern railroad indicated that they would grant an easement on their property to permit this addition if the North Shore railroad would make the request. It was after this, Mr. Gilroy states, that Mr. Smith of the North Shore advised that his road did not consider the expense was warranted, nor could they approve of the other safety measures recommended.

Mr. Gilroy concludes that the only recourse now left the City of Highland Park is to appeal to the Illinois Traffic Commission when the North Shore railroad will apply for an increase in all fares early in September.
