

Deeps and Shallows

Perfect Timing

The dinner's over. Manful spouse
Is gorged with loaves and fishes.
Alone, I scrub and dry the pans
And myriads of dishes.

When all is done, I breathe
lament
For woman's dull existence.
Then Hubby saunters kitchen-ward
With offers of assistance.

She Floored Me!

Last week we met by accident,
Yet so much has transpired,
I'll bet you guess—and I confess!
That no more is desired.

In that short week of which I speak
I've known her smiles and frowns;
True love, they say, will run this way . . .
It has its ups and downs.

At times I find, when fate is kind,
And we are all alone,
She'll gaze at me expectantly
Until my wish is known.

Her sweet consent is always lent,
We move in harmony,
Yes, side by side, like lovers tried,
Unto our destiny.

A romance true? If you but knew
How sad is your narrator;
I do not know the girl—that's so!
She runs an elevator.

Highwood Legion Auxiliary Changes Meeting Date

Tips On Fishing

Hooray for vacation! Maybe you wish
To take things easy—just idle and fish;

And you'll want to impress the finny tribe
So they'll swallow your bait—with nary a jibe.

The things you'll need to angle well
The fish know best—but the fish won't tell . . .

So take your bankbook and browse around
In a shop where sporting goods are found.

Leaders and tackle and things like that,
Hip boots, scales . . . and an old felt hat:

When you think you've an outfit that's pretty hot
You're probably right, but like as not

The fish will goggle and glide right by,
With a flip of a fin at your gorgeous fly;

And then, most likely, be taken in
By a home-made rod and an old bent pin.
