Simian Saga

Symmetrical Sue Sapajou, Scorch-spilling siren of the zoo, Sought stalwart swain for slinging woo.

Sagacious sphinx was Springbok Sam, His smirking sapience a sham. Slush sessions sent him on the scam.

Sue sedulously sowed the seed Of sentiment, to supersede His sonant scorn of sweet-meat feed.

Sam's shilly-shallying was shrewd. Sardonic satire sparked a feud. Sue sulked in spinster solitude. Marmalade

Two Grandmothers

Once upon a time there were two very nice ladies. One had a son, and one a daughter. The son and the daughter were married—to each other.

One day these nice ladies were notified that they were the grandmothers of a fine baby girl.

Wild horses could not have held these newly-made grandparents. Undismayed by the prospect of a long journey, they piled into a car and sped, like homing pigeons, on the trail of the stork.

Bubbling with excitement they spread the good news as they went. Not a lunch room attendant or a filling station keeper on the way who wasn't allowed to share the thrill.

Arriving at their destination the two perspiring grandmothers, laden with gifts, made straight for the hospital, where, as a special favor, they were allowed to examine the treasure at close range. They report that it was satisfactory in every way, and will not be turned in for a new one.

Moral: Don't smile in a superior way at fatuous grandparents. You may be one, yourself, some day.

The Fleet-footed Cheetah

In the animal kingdom nothing is fleetier Than the fur-coated, long-legged, leopard-like cheetah.

Most often comprised in the cat catalog, In many respects he resembles a dog.

He runs wild in Persia and India, yet He can make, we are told, a most lovable pet.

His sprint, so spectacular, matchless in scope, Is employed to hunt down the swift antelope,

Which rivals the greyhound's ground-covering speed— And that is a record impressive, indeed;

For the greyhound displays an insatiable habit Of chasing—and catching—the scuttling rabbit.

When you're out on the speed-way, with motor a-throb, Consuming the miles in your high-powered job,

And you look at the 70 shown on your meter, You are matching the speed of the long-legged cheetah. —R.B.O.
