This Month in Your Service BULLETIN

Did you know that the first shipment of fruit under refrigeration upon any railroad in the United States was made in Northern Illinois? With the Railroad Fair again playing Chicago (it opens June 25) and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago & Eastern Illinois celebrating their charter centennials this year, we've been at the railroad history books again. We read the words of the only then-surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence at the laying of the cornerstone of the first public carrier in this country; he described his part in the ceremony as "among the most important acts of my life, second only to my signing the Declaration of Independence, if even it be second to that." We read the speech delivered in 1835 by the governor of Illinois which convinced the Legislature that this state should have railroads. We read how the Panic of 1837 slowed the Legislature's extensive railroad development program, how many years passed before the first railroad came to these parts, and how Chicago's first two railroads used the city's first locomotive, same passenger station and same tracks. Read the Bulletin—see why Chicago and Northern Illinois is today the railroad center of the nation.
