Police Record In The Land Of Enchantment

Dear Millie: What'd you know? I've established a police record in Duke City. And here is how it came about.

Before I'd been in town a week I received a visit from the Police Force. The big black car with "Police" in large gold letters pulled into my driveway and stopped in full view of the entire block.

Confident that a mistake had been made, I stepped to my front door. My conscience completely at ease, I thought, just for an instant, that the handsome young officer might be there to offer me the keys to the Land of Enchantment.

"Good morning," I greeted him, cheerily.

"Good morning." He stood there very stiff and formal.

I waited for him to state his errand, meanwhile wishing he would remove his large goggles so that I could see his eyes.

We both waited.

"Well," I finally remarked, somewhat impatiently, "Is there anything I can do for you?"

Imagine, Millie, asking such a question of The Law. Almost immediately, though perfectly innocent, I became conscious of a feeling of great guilt.

"You called the police."

I gasped. "Oh, no! I never did anything of the sort!"

"Isn't this South 12345?"

"Yes, but . . . Really, I didn't! . . . What was the call about?"

"You said the dogs in this neighborhood kept you awake all night."

"Nonsense," I replied, indignantly, "I slept very well."

By this time, Millie, I was so annoyed that I didn't particularly care whether he removed his goggles or not. Although he certainly was handsome, standing there so tall and trim in his perfectly fitting uniform.

"Look," I said, "I've just moved into this neighborhood. Besides, I wouldn't bother the Police Force about dogs. There's some mistake."

"May I use your telephone?"

What could I do, Millie? He walked into the house in full view of several bug-eyed neighbors who were out picking up their morning papers. I stood by, wondering when the paddy wagon would arrive to give me a free ride.

The officer announced that the chief wanted to speak to me. My knees were shaking under my long house coat, but I managed to keep my voice steady. In my best manner and with a most distinguished accent I told him: "I'm Mrs. E. B. I did not telephone the station. Was my name given with the call?"

"No name," the chief said, "just address. But I'm sure you're not the party who called, for your voice is quite different."

Of course, Millie, I was furious, for it was evident that some one had put me on the spot. And later I found out who it was. And since I've heard her speak, I know that what the Chief said about my voice is a real compliment.

As ever, —E. B.

Couples Club Is Started At Redeemer Lutheran

A new group is in the process of formation at Redeemer Lutheran Church, of 587 West Central Avenue, according to the temporary chairman, Edward Juul. The name 'Couples Club' has been adopted for the present. A first meeting to which couples, unmarried and married, are invited, will be held on the coming Sunday, November 20th, beginning at 7 p.m. and closing at 10 p.m. Children may be brought and motion pictures will be shown them during the parent's get-together in another hall. The plans were initiated by a committee composed of Calvin and Bea Brusso; Nick and Clara Rudolph, Orval and Dolores Koerwitz, and Ed and Agnes Juul. Basic to the new organization is accepting responsibility for tasks in the congregation that demand the joint action of an interested group.

The planning committee has decided that a monthly religious discussion would be incorporated into every meeting. In a letter sent out to all prospective members, chairman Ed Juul announces that meetings will be held monthly.
