These Unpredictable Men

Dear Millie:
I'm sure no other city boasts such wonderful neighbors as Albuquerque. Perhaps it's because we come from everywhere, and are grateful to be in this land of enchantment.

Take Happy, our next-door neighbor. Of course she has another name, but no one ever uses it. She is a dear, and everyone loves her.

The other morning she came to my back door, tears streaming down her face.

"Why, Happy, whatever has happened?"

"Oh, darlin'," she sobbed, "it's that darned painter—" Her words came tumbling over each other. "He hasn't a lick of sense... he said I'd want the roof green and I said no. But I didn't want it blue, either. So he said how about turquoise, and just then, the phone rang, and I said, well, that might be nice... and oh, darlin'—that terrible man just went ahead and painted the roof while I was on the phone. You know how it is—a woman doesn't want to make up her mind that quick—"

"But, Happy," I broke in, "I think the roof looks nice—"

"But Bill won't... and he'll never pay the painter... and he'll b-blame me—"

"What are you doing today?" I asked, to change her trend of thought.

"I'm taking poor Mrs. Lewis' little girl to her aunt's—the little boy has chicken pox—and I must call at the hospital—poor Mr. Brandon—he's been in that cast so long, and... oh, say, darlin', do something for me, won't you?"

"Of course I will—anything!"

"Tell Bill, when he comes home, that the house looks lovely—"

"Indeed I will, Happy, now don't worry—"

Off she went on her errands of good will.

Bill arrived while the sun was still shining splendidly on the freshly-painted roof.

"Oh, Bill," I called from my yard, "doesn't the house look wonderful?"

He hesitated, and I held my breath.

Finally his answer came. "You can always," he stated proudly, "depend on my wife when it comes to good taste!"

As ever,
—E.B.
