Guilty Conscience?

Hi, Pops!
Just a line to remind you that I am still your darling dotter. And busy-ouch!

This week a bunch of us from the dorm and our dates attended a holiday formal. Terrific affair! But what do you think? The dateless ones in the dorm (old meannies!) collected all our photos of the boys-back-home and arranged them in sort of gallery in the reception room, so that when we returned with our dates there were the boys-we-left-behind staring at us in the deepest reproach. Was my physiog crimson!

Another date with a Chem lesson, so this will be short.
Love 'n' kitheth,
Your Cunning Co-ed

Always,
—E.B.

Perfect Courtesy

When Barby lunched with me, one noon, I asked her if she'd like a prune; "Oh, yes," she chirped, in tone polite, "That is my fav'rite appetite!"

Just After Christmas

Barbara says that she is really glad Christmas is over, because, now, she doesn't have to be so good.

Who Won?

(Word from Albuquerque)
Dear Millie:
The south-western Indians always fascinate me. Their indifference to pale faces, their independence in dress and the things that truly interest them are a great source of wonder to me.

Recently I followed an Indian woman for several blocks, just because her grace in walking intrigued me. She wore many full petticoats topped by a skirt of gay print. Her blouse was rich purple velvet. She wore no hat, but her hair was bound with brilliant ribbons. She was tall and well built. Walking firmly in her soft moccasins, her whole body moved in rhythm with her swirling skirts. She moved in and out among her pale-faced sister shoppers, quite indifferent to their fashions.

When she entered a variety store I followed shamelessly, for somehow the cadent atmosphere she created was a beauty which touched me. I wondered what she would buy.

As I watched, she stopped at a toy counter heavily laden with all sorts of games and playthings. On display was a Chinese checker game all set up for players.

Fifteen minutes later as I left the store my Indian friend was still moving the marbles about. I've no doubt, Millie, that she won the game.

Gifts Of Marlin

(Excerpt of letter from A.C.O.)
"Last night one of our friends wanted to distribute his marlin fish among some of his special friends and we were asked to go along.

"To begin with, marlin are sportsman's fish and cannot be sold. So the chap catching a marlin has to have it cut into pieces and smoked, then dolled up in waxed paper, plus fancy outside wrappings. These fancy fishermen belong to some sort of an association, and when they have a gift to present they carry along a queer sort of a trumpet. They blow a blast from said trumpet before they ring the door bell. Recognizing the trumpet call, the family inside gathers at the door before opening it. To be given a gift of a piece of marlin is considered a great compliment.

"It took 3 1/2 hours to make all our stops. We rode up and down in deep canyons back and forth in the valley—also on many miles of boulevard before we reached home again."

Thanks for this interesting piece of information, A.C.O. You were certainly honored by the invitation to go along. We are always glad to hear about these quaint California customs.

Fire Chief Hennig Gives Timely Caution

"Now is the time to make certain that your Christmas Holidays are not marred by fires or other accidents resulting from defective Christmas lighting equipment," warns Chief Hennig, of the Highland Park Fire Department.

1. "Is the attachment plug cracked or broken? Are the parts of the plug held together securely?"
2. "Bend the wire at close intervals to see if the insulation has hardened and is in danger of breaking off."
3. "Inspect each lamp socket for cracks or loose parts."
4. "Keeping the string away from any flammable material, screw lamps in firmly, and plug in the string. Hold each socket firmly and twist the wires slightly to be sure there is no loose connection that will cause a short circuit or spark when the lights are on the tree. If any sparking occurs, the string should not be used under any circumstances."

Obedient Pets Need Well-Trained Owners

Owning a puppy is one of childhood's treats, but good owners are trained as well as their pets. Like a human baby, the animal variety needs special care. Punishment should be gentle—mere taps with a folded newspaper—never a stick or hard object. Their baths should be done in three quick steps: A thorough wetting with warm water, a good soaping, and finally a rinsing. Never let your pup stand in chill, dirty water. Then—a quick and gentle rub dry with a clean, warm towel, followed by a combing and brushing, will produce a pet that looks shiny as silk, ready to frisk with his young owner without being afraid. This is the expert advice of a pet shop owner whose views appear in a current issue of American Home Magazine.
