

of Beaumont. He had been told that the Provincial Secretary had been informed long before he (Mr. O'Sullivan) had moved in the matter of the non-holding of the inquest. He would like to know to whom Mr Langmuir's instructions to hold an inquest were given, because Dr. Riddell presented himself at the prison and was refused permission by the Warden to hold the inquiry. Either the Warden disobeyed instructions, or he never received those instructions. Under similar circumstances it would be easy for officials of the Government to present reports that might cover up the greatest infamy. The law was that it was absolutely necessary to hold an inquest on the body of any prisoner who died in gaol, and why was an enquiry not held in this case? It was said that the man was buried before the order of the medical officer was given for an enquiry; but most people would say that it was the duty of the Warden to give this order. An appropriate report on the occasion would have been "dead men tell no tales." He had been informed that the guards knew of McKelvey's danger, and were asked by him to procure a priest of his own religion.

The motion was amended as suggested by Mr. Wood. Carried.

The House adjourned at 1:10 p. m.
