Students stage walkouts to protest charities ban

TIM WHITNELL

Catholic students around Halton walked out of classes briefly late last week to protest the school board's stance on banning some charities from school-based fundraising.

The scene played out Thursday and Friday at a number of the nine Catholic secondary schools across the region.

The focal point of thousands of students' displeasure is a controversial board resolution enacted in February that prohibits financial donations to charities and non-profits that support, directly, or indirectly, abortion, contraception, sterilization, euthanasia or human embryonic stem cell research - practices that are deemed to be contrary to Catholic values.

For now, school fundraising efforts may only be directed to charities and/or non-profit organizations that meet the requirements outlined in the February motion.

The approved list initially consisted of 100 groups including the Women's Place, Toronto Hospital for Sick Children (SickKids) and the Princess Margaret Cancer Foundation. The list was shortened to 30 organizations after the March 20 board meeting.

At Bishop Reding Catholic Secondary School in Milton, about 500 mostly senior students congregated outside the school on Thursday morning to protest the charity ban.

Another 400-450 marched along the sidewalk in front of the Main Street East school for about an hour late Friday morning.

A student at the front of the long line held aloft a sign that said, 'Don't stop the Donation. We're a New Generation' while many students chanted, "Support All Causes."

Reding student council president Karyssa Chan is not happy with the board's decision.
