

Questionnaire a region advocacy strategy

tion of government assisted housing programs in the region.

Carr has been calling for the implementation of new technologies to increase response times for ambulance dispatch calls, and says the province is finally moving forward on the topic.

Carr says the region follows up to measure the impact of the questionnaire, which the region has been sending out to candidates since 2006, as part of their advocacy strategy.

"Most of them are very good," Carr said, at filling them out and sending them back for the region to post on their website.

"Later on, after the election we follow up with them to ensure that they're carrying our message forward."

Sometimes, he says, the candidates will have their researchers fill out the questionnaire on their behalf.

"Upwards of 25 per cent of our revenue actually comes from the province," said Carr. "It's extremely important the candidates fill it out and let us know where they stand."
