

'I'm proud of what we were able to accomplish': Naidoo-Harris

She encouraged supporters to think about all the good things that were accomplished, including a new hospital and a university campus on its way.

"I'm proud of what we were able to accomplish... the list is long," she added. "We spent money when it was needed and I will always be proud of that."

She said the people of Ontario benefited from four years under the Liberal government.

"Don't let anyone make you feel that wasn't the case."

Thanking her family, she said her husband Randy has always been by her side, along with her children and her father, who taught her from a young age to always do the right thing.

"He's the sign warrior," she said, referring to putting up new signs when others were damaged.

"He didn't complain when the light was on, and I was going to bed at 2 in the morning, reading my binders and getting up to go to work again at 5 in the morning. Not a complaint, just encouragement, and I have someone amazing beside me."

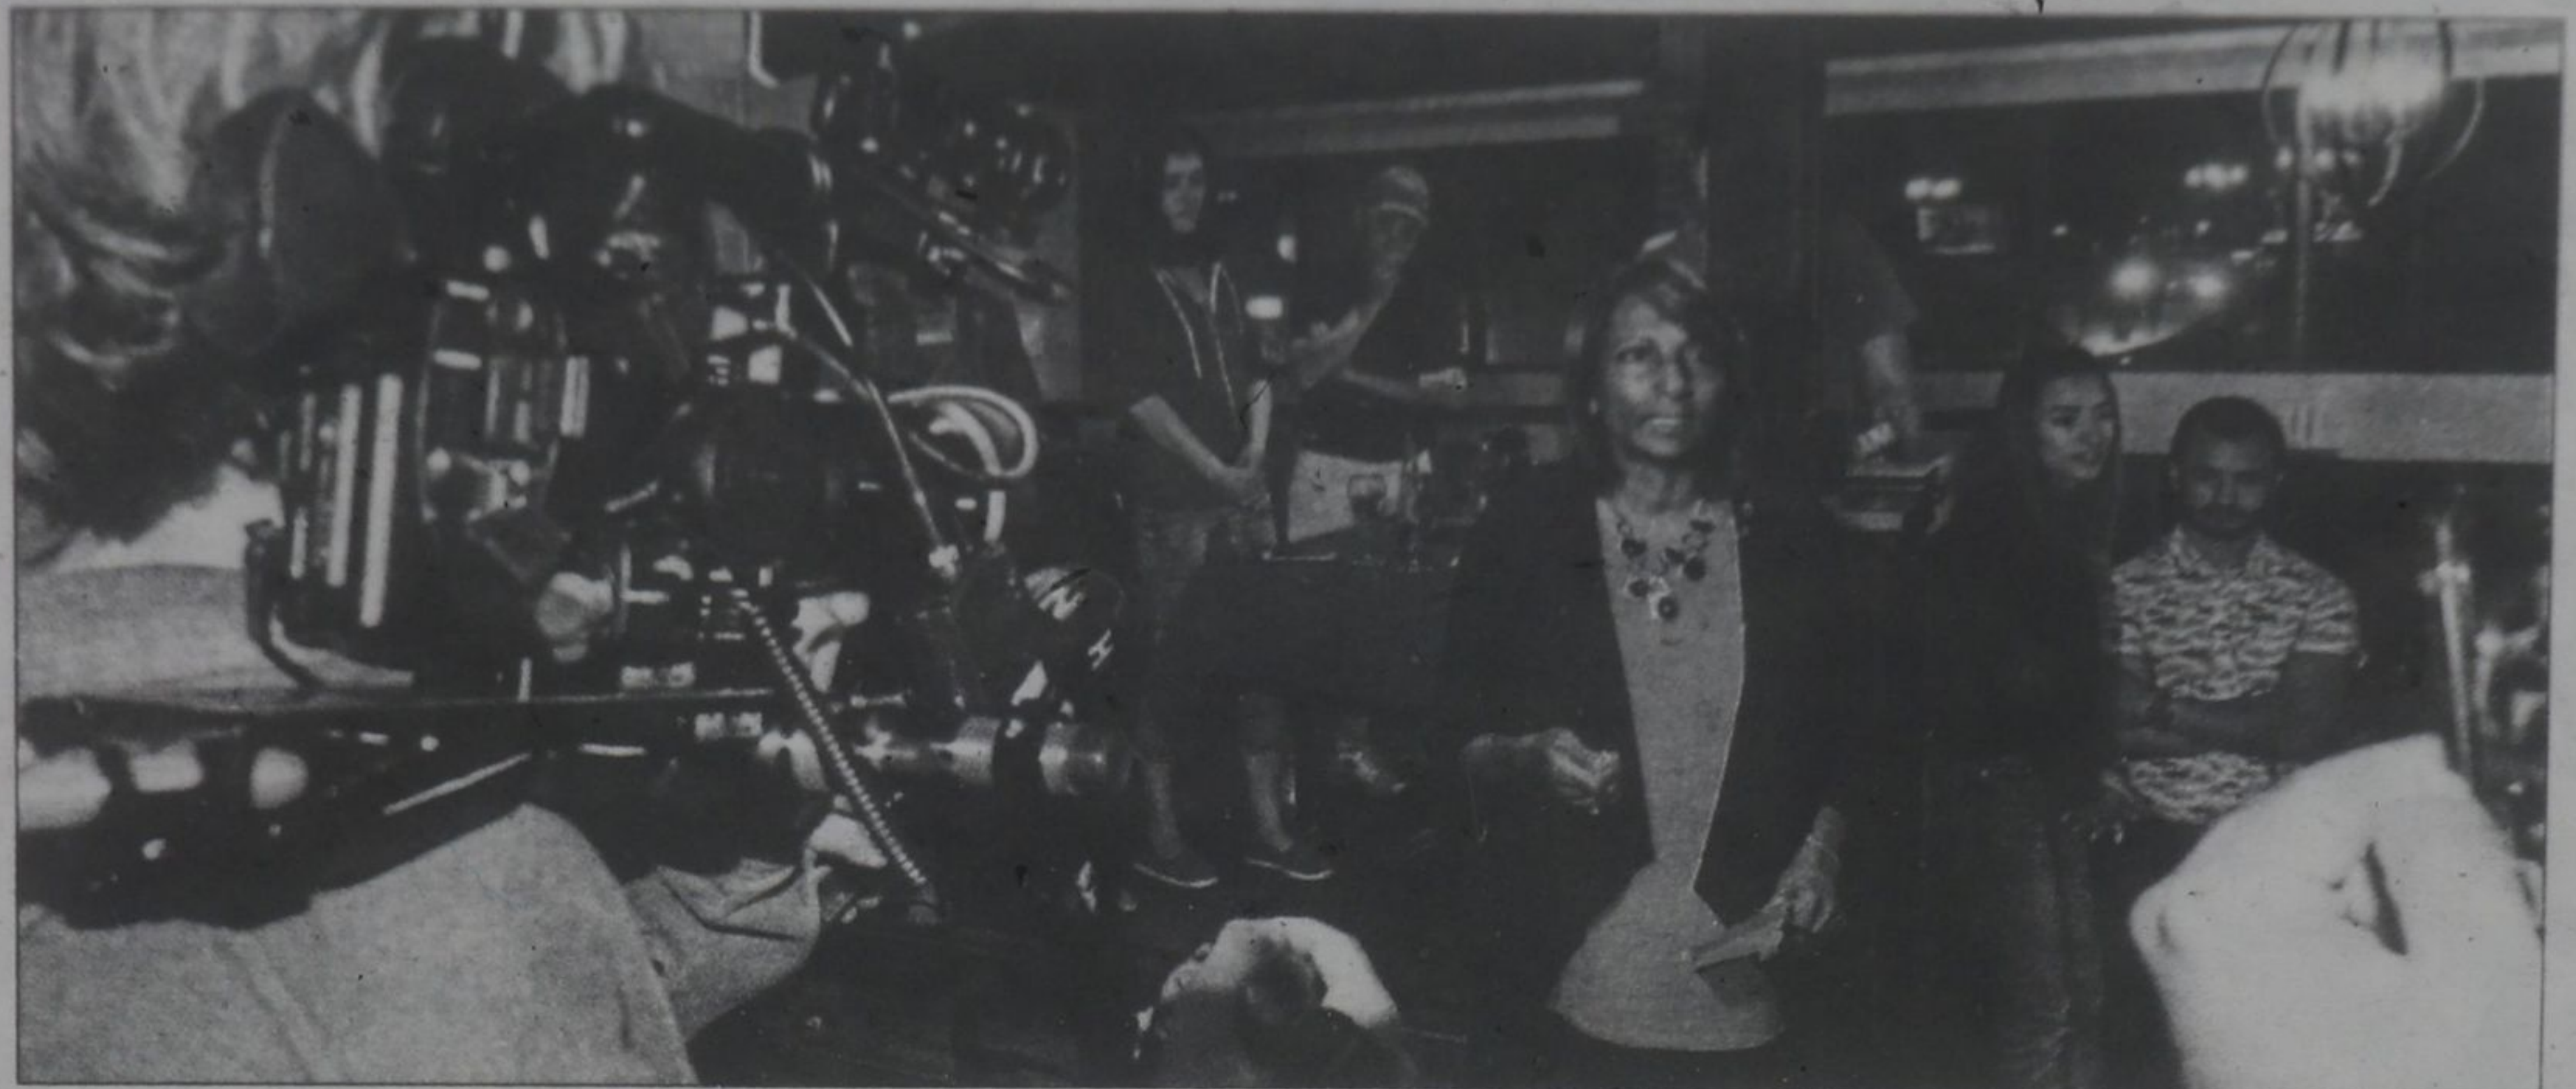

In closing, she also thanked Kathleen Wynne, who she called a true leader. Despite holding on to her seat, Wynne announced she is stepping down as Ontario Liberal leader.

"There's no one like the premier," said Naidoo-Harris. "She has integrity and she has worked hard, she cares about people. She is a true leader. She always works hard to do the right thing."

"It has been one of the proudest moments of my life to sit in her cabinet and work underneath her."

Finally, Naidoo-Harris thanked her Queen's Park team.

"I don't know finer people. You are the best, all of you. You've all worked so hard to put up the good fight," she said.

"I will never forget how hard you worked for me," she said, her voice breaking.

Meanwhile, Gill said, "It's obviously never fun when you're not on the right side. But I've been there on the winning side and I've been there on the losing side and totally sympathize."

"Regardless of how the media might have portrayed Doug Ford, we had complete confidence because we were talking to people at the doors."

Naidoo-Harris won the 2014 election by a roughly 5,000 margin (33,724-27,937) over longtime PC incumbent Ted Chudleigh.

It was her second run at the riding, having lost by about 3,000 votes in 2011. It had been a PC stronghold for well over a decade, going back to early '90s when Nole Duignan and the NDP got the surprise win.
