RELIEF FOR FAMILY AS CATHOLIC BOARD BACKS AWAY FROM PLAN TO TAKE OVER FARMLAND FOR NEW SCHOOL

MURRAY WHYTE / TORONTO STAR

David McCann, part of a long line of farmers to ply his family's 200 acres near Milton, had a very different experience at the local farmers' market this weekend than he's had in recent months.

"People were coming up to our stand to congratulate us, or give us high fives," said the elated farmer, whose family has been working the same land here since 1827.

"It was sure a lot nicer than the last few months of condolences and regrets."

McCann and family had plenty of reason to celebrate. On Friday, the Halton Catholic District School Board withdrew a plan to expropriate 20 acres of the McCann family's farm to build a high school.

It ended nearly five months of anxious waiting: The McCanns had been informed in April that the board, which under the Ontario Expropriations Act had the power to force a sale of the land from the family, was seeking a portion of the farm on which to build.

An outcry in the community quickly produced an online petition of more than 37,000 signatures, and caught the attention of the school board's board of trustees.

"We were really just looking at lines on a map," said board trustee Anthony Quinn. "As far as we were concerned,
