INVESTIGATION SPARKED BY COMPLAINT

lated industry and fears professional repercussions.

Town officials refuse to publicly comment on Pratt's case or his departure from his $158,000-a-year job, calling it a personnel matter.

Pratt's employment quietly ended following a closed-door council meeting on March 25. On his LinkedIn page, Pratt says he retired.

Pratt, 51, has not responded to repeated requests for comment. When approached at his Acton home he co-owns with his wife, he quickly closed the door on reporters.

Pratt was appointed to fire chief in July 2017 after nearly 10 years with Milton.

The investigation into Pratt's conduct was sparked by a complaint from Tricia Staver, a postal worker who lives in Toronto. Staver first met Pratt in July 2018 through the dating website Plenty of Fish. In his profile picture, he is seen smiling, standing in front of a fire-engine red Dodge Durango, a town-owned SUV he drove as chief.

It's the same vehicle in which the two had sex during their four-month relationship, Staver said in an interview. Sometimes, they had sex while parked outside Station 2 in Campbellville, she said.

"Good morning hot stuff. Happy to report that the Milton Fire Department vehicle is a-okay," Pratt texted Staver following one of their trysts. He texted back a little while later. "Okay, now that it's warmed up a little bit I can smell us. And I'm not complaining it's just an observation."

The couple never had sex in one of the town's fire engines, Staver said, though she says they had discussed it. She alleges that Pratt boasted about having done it in the past. "He liked to brag that he likes to give women the full fireman experience," she said.

Their relationship ended in November, after Staver says she discovered Pratt had been untruthful about the status of his marriage. Staver says she later discovered other women who had sexual relationships with Pratt.

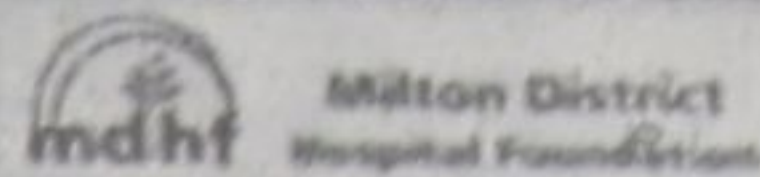

One of those women spoke with the investigator hired by Milton. She first met Pratt because the company she worked
