Swedish environmental activist Greta Thunberg visited Milton's Esther the Wonder Pig on Tuesday, Oct. 1.

The 16-year-old — who has gained worldwide recognition for her school climate strike movement — tweeted photos of herself with the 600 pound pig, known around the world, and who boasts 68,000 followers herself.

"Such a pleasure to finally meet @EstherThePig and all the other animals and volunteers at the Happily Ever Esther Farm Sanctuary in Ontario! #govegan #animalrescue" she tweeted, alongside a photo of herself, taking pictures of both Esther and her dog pal, Phil.

It generated close to 30,000 likes from around the world. Thunberg is on a North American tour, following her sailing in to the UN Climate Action Summit in New York.

Steve Jenkins and Derek Walter tweeted back, stating "Thanks Greta for all you do." The pair gained worldwide attention after they started a Twitter account for their Esther, who they were promised was a micro pig who wouldn't grow larger than 70 pounds.

Earlier on Tuesday, @EstherThePig had tweeted a photo of Greta seated beside Esther, who looks like she's napping ... "We were going to change the world together, but she took my last cupcake."

The latter being a reference to the cupcakes that Esther loves to eat.

Then she tweeted "I taught Greta my 'take a nap and forget them' technique for handling haters. She mastered it quickly, but I wanted a bit more practice."

Another 72,000 people liked Esther's post with Greta that appeared on Instagram.
