Poetrn. The Return of Spring. Now genial days once more prevail, The skies assume a softer blue, The forests doff their icy mail, And waiting stand as if they knew The near approach of festive Spring, And heard her heralds' trumpets ring. Come, gentle spirit, laughing Spring, Oh, hasten with thy magic wand! And spread rejoicing through the land Forsake awhile the bowers of fairy And come, for we expectant tarry. Bring verdure from the mountain bleak, Give fire unto the fading eye, New health unto the wasting check,

Soft moonlights in a purple sky, And tune the voices of the streams With music from the land of dieams. And let the lark thy footsteps follow. The mellow blackbird and the thrush, The wood-dove and the chattering swallow,

That hovers in the twilight's hush Round mossy gables of the farm, When all the air is faint with balm. Broider the hills with columbines, And flock the fields with dasies white; Festoon the brooks with leafy vines, Through which shall play the emerald light And bring meek violets for the brave, And deck the patriot soldier's grave. We bid the winds attune thy praise With wild, wired music ever more,

Or where the pine its crest uprears, And waves away the passing years.

To-Morrow. It is an idle and mischievous word 'I'll not go about it to-day, but I'll be | gin to-morrow,' says the thoughtless person. Instartly the prophetess commenced to give the details of the life of some young girl who she said, had long since passed away. The young lady protested that t was the hair of her intended husband but the seer persisted in her story, and ntimated that the young man word wig. The fair inquirer departed in high dudgeon, but resolved to put the matter to the test the same evening. So when her admirer arrived, she accidently gave his hair a delicate little pull, whereon all the silken curls came off bodily, leaving the young mans head perfectly bare. Disagreeable as the discovery may have been, it served to establish the fame of the wonderful medium, who reigns supreme over a whole roomful of "locks," and is the great sensation of the day among all the lovers robes. It was inspected by some antiquarians, including Dr. Todd, who expressed it as his belief that it was the original founder of the church, St. Patrick. It is in a good state of preservation, and is in every respect a most interesting relic. When the church is inished it will be placed in a prominent position, because there is no more remarkable antiquity in the building.
