FRIENDSHIP. Friendship, 'tis not a passing cloud, That vanishes away,

Vith every stormy wind that blows,

And will not longer stay. Friendship, 'tis not the metcor's glare, Appearing to the sight, So beautiful, but flits away,

Like spectres in the night. But friendship is a lovely flower, And like the early rose, It sheds a fragrance o'er the soul, And mitigates our woes.

And as the sun, that mighty orb, Emits his cheering ray, And with increasing lustre shines, Just at the close of day.

So friensdhip grows more dear, more true, As days and years depart, nd twines its strong, enduring cord, More closely round the heart. ANNIE F. Howson,
