BABY CASTLE.

On the carpet plains of home,

Fine within from floor to dome;

In the sunlight's golden beams.

And he's held in state so grand,

Mother says—if no one else does—

"He's the King of baby-land."

Here he bravely fights his battles,

When old puss would slyly creep,

Downy couch where baby dreams;

And its walls are woven willow,

Snowy curtains at the window;

Laces. too, that softly glimmer

That's the heritage of baby,

Over guarded most or turret,

Just to curl herself to sleep.
