POETRY. A SONG FOR SCOTLAND.

Oh for a breath o' the moorlands, A while o' the caller air, For a smell o' the flowerin' heather, My very beart is sair.

That smile as they shadow the drifting A' the bonny summer day.

Oh for the tops o' mountains White wi' eternal snaw, For the mists that drift across the lift, For the strong east winds that blaw.

I am sick o' the blazing sunshine

That burns through the weary hours, O' gaudy birds singing never a sang, An' beautiful scentless flowers. I wud gie a' their Southern glory

For a taste o' a gude saut wind, Wi' a road ower the bonny sea before, And a track o' foam behind. Auld Scotland may be rugged, Her mountain stern and bare;

But, oh, for a breath o' her moorland. A whiff o' her caller air ! HARRIET M. DAVIDSON.
