Georges. He married Anne, only daughter of Sir William Petty, and their grandson boy. Francis, the third Earl under the new title, died without issue, the title and estates going to his cousin Henry, third Marquis of Lansdowne, the representative of the younger son of Thomas, the first Earl of Kerry to whom had been limited the Petty estates. The Pettys were sprung from Anthony Petty, of Rumsey, in Hampshire, a tailor, in the early part of the seventeenth century. This tailor's son, named William, rose to high favor. By hard work, he made himself a doctor, performed many wonderful cures, travelled a great deal, was an inventor, went to Ireland in the service of Cromwell, conducted a survey of that country, and died as Sir William etty, owning 85,000 acres in Kerry alone. His personal property was worth £45,000 and his rents £6,500 a year. His son was made Baron Shelburne but was attainted by King James, but the final success of William restored their fortunes. A second son succeeded in 1696. Uuder William he was name Earl of Shelburne and Viscount of Queen Anne and George I. and George Dying without issue he bequeathed his
