UNTEARABLE PANTS.

Hurrah! for Smith's Untearable Pants-They are the best in town; I donned a pair the other day And then marched up and down The busy streets of Hamilton, Proud as a peer of France, So let the boy and, yes, the girls, See me in my new pants.

Next, to hold communion with Dame nature, I essayed To climb a tree just next to town, And on a limb arrayed,

My proud proportions in the sun To bask and think, when lo! The limb from off the parent stem It suddenly let go.

There chanced to be a lower limb. Ah! fate to me was kind, As I descended through the air My pants caught on behind, And there I dropped, say, was fate kind? Till I began to swear. Kick as I would those blooming pants Would neither rip or tear.

My mother she got riled one day At something I had done, And so she kindly undertook To chastise her dear son; She played it on me right and left, You bet she made me dance. But, Mr. Smith, when she got through She hadn't tore my pants.

One dollar fifty, trifling sum, For breeches such as they, A whirlwind couldn't tear them If through them it chanced to play; I found when sliding down a board Nail heads plenty there, Those famous pants within the rear They would not, could not tear.

And so a pair of pants I'll have, Perhaps till I am grey; Good, round, substantial, that will stand For Pants, he's got the stuff Can't tear them.
