He marked when his strength was ride with Alan Breck?"

And listened to each complaint, He bade him rest for a season, Like a weary and worn out traveller,

Who sighs for the daylights close; He knew he oft was longing For Home, and its sweet repose, And He called him from his labor, Ere the shadows had round him crept,

And silently watching o'er him, He giveth His loyed ones sleep. He giveth it, oh so gently, As mother will hush to rest, The babe that she softly pillows So tenderly on her breast. Forgotten are now the trials

The path so rough and steep, For with many a soothing promise. He giveth His loved ones sleep. Gone to the home of the ransomed, The beautiful Heavenly city, The mansions prepared by our Jesus For those whoare washed in his blood

From Earth, and its pleasures, ar Lits labors, temptations, and trials Gone to to the fullness of glory True rest in the presence of God.

Gone from his God-honored service His labor of love for the Master, His memory shall ever be cherished, Though here we shall see him no guide.

Before we shall meet on that shore,

Gone to be ever with Jesus, To reap the reward of his labors. To strengthen and comfort God's people, The way of salvation make known Faithful and patient and loving He steadily followed his Master, Victorious now and all glorious Through Jesus his Saviour, alone.

While deeply on earth we shall miss to us. His place will be empty forever,

The shadow of death rests upon it,
