"Shay, wife,

Whaz in zunder,

He had "been down town working very late" or, at least, that's what he had planned to tell his wife, but the influence of too much "bottled in bond" hair restorer had upset his remembering appratus, and he arrived home somewhat befuddled about 5 a.m. He sat down on his door step, to think it over and didn't notice that the ice man had left a chunk of ice on the step. He leaned back against it and went to sleep. Just as the hired girl opened the door to get the ice she heard him growl in his sleep. "Shay, wife, whaz in zhunder makes you get fup an not round an get your feet all cold, an then come an stick em up against ellers's back, when he'zh sleep for":

That doesn't need much explanation. It was simply a case of cold in back. Now speaking of cold in the back—our $7.50 ulster is so warly lined throughout with heavy English corduroy that the climate of this country is never cold enough to get through it. We call it the "Klondike" and there's money in it for you if you're in need of an ulster. But some men prefer the ordinary walking coat. W have several hundred here for you to select from.
