Did you ever go visiting some old family friends who have lived in one house all their lives and who have kept everything they've bought during that time-even to the old hobby horse without the rockers that belonged to Sohn when he was a little boy years before he became a prohibitionest and had other hobbies to ride? Where they put you in the front room with the old fashioned bedstead and cold sheets and pictures of "Southern Beauties" framed in sea shell frames? You've been there? Well you remember how the next day some one got out the old picture album and showed you the photographs-"Now that's my great, great Grandfather and that's his wife, they are both dead now. Did you ever notice the stiff and unnatural positions of the men folks in those old fashioned pictures. Uncle Thomas sitting with his knees crossed and hands crossed in his lap and Aunt Martha standing by his side with one hand on his shoulder? Do you know why the men looked so awkwark? Because clothes were so dear then that they only wore their Sunday suits on Sundays and when having their liknesses taken felt awkward in new clothes. Now-a-days it's different. A COLD FRAUD

The Iceman Worked It Skillfully For a Time, but Was Caught at Last. A new bride and her recently emancipated mother, each luckily born with a sense of humor, met the other day at the studio of an even more Bohemian sister and merrily tried to see which could tell the bigger story of her experiences. The deaf and dumb hallboy who has eves in the back of his head, the faithless butcher and "the lady who wants washing" had each furnished a share of an irresistible quarter of an hour. "I had always supposed," said the old lady as she rose to go, that an honest ianitor was the noblest work of God. I have come to the conclusion that there is something in the very air of an apartment which is demoralizing to every one who either makes, bakes, brews or in any way serves the dwellers therein. Lots of things my 20 years of housekeeping had prepared me for, but I found out a brand new scheme the other day. "Ever since we went to the Marie Jeannette to live I had wondered how it was that we used as much ice in our small ice chest as we used to in our large refrigerator. I saw the ice put in each morning. and the next morning the place that knew it knew it no more. I studied that thing off and on for a month before I found my gay deceiver ont. One day I happened to sit down when talking to the cook, and I saw that the ice chest lid seemed tilted up. I looked in. There was a nugget of ice left, but nothing tall enough to prevent the lid from closing tight. I investigated. In each hinge of that lid there was a match. I took them out. The lid went down snug. - The more I thought of it the more certain I was that it was not a mere coincidence that there were two of them. When the iceman came that morning, I watched out and had the satisfaction of seeing him look surprised when the lid went down with a bang under his hand. The next morning we told him that there was ice enough, which was true, the hot kitchen air being shut out The next morning I staid away until he was gone. telling Rosa to give him the kitchen to himself. The lid was tilted up the same old way, but no matches. I got my glasses on and lighted the gas, and there, if you please, in each hinge was a little want of chewing gum."

the lot gathered up her raiment and fled to look into the vitals of her own household And not a pot of them all could call the kettle black. It is a brand new scheme but it works. - New York Sur

At Least He Thinks It Is Hers and That Is Sufficient. A St. Louis girl, who lives on Delmar not too far away from Grand avenue. brought with her from Canada a fad which holds sway among the gilded youth of Montreal. There all the beaux wear their sweethearts' baby teeth on their watch chains. It is a tender tribute to a lovely and beloved girl, and the St Louis maiden thought she would delight herewn admir er with a token at once so unique and intimate. When she asked her mamma if she had saved one of her baby to the that good lady informed her that she had not. Baby teeth in those days, after having been jerked out of the mouth with a string tied to a doorknob, were not worth much, and after the youngster who was relieved of it got through playing with it it usually found its way into the fire with the sweep ings or into the ash box he way of the But a tooth-a sweet little baby tooththis young girl must have, and she con fided her secret to her dentist. Could be provide her with one? Yes. Why not? If she would come the next day, he would have a little pearly tooth ready for her. The tooth was obtained and the maiden carried it down to the jeweler to have it mounted in fine gold filigree in the shape of a breloque to dangle from a watch chain The young man is wearing it now with the pride and devotion born of a loving heart. He has told the doner that every night before he lays his watch on the bureau he kisses the little tooth with which his beloved had done her first biting And she-beware of her-has no compunction about the fond deception, but rather glories in it, and tells her girl friends how fond
