BOSNIA GYPSIES. The Tribes of the Balkans Are Experts In

Stealing Horses. In Bosnia, as elsewhere, gypsies concern themselves largely with the buying selling and breaking in of horses. Some strangers in the Balkans call certain gynsies horse dealers. Horse stealers sound nearly the same and is often an equally made the survey for a projected railroad in Servia told me of an incident he witnessed at a horse fair. A farmer brought in a fine young horse-far the best animal in the fair-and was very proud of his mount. A gypsy dealer, with one eye crewed up and body bent to the shape of the letter C, criticised the paces, saying at last, "He would be a fine horse if he were not lame." The farmer indignantly denied the lameness. "Well, trot him out and you'll see," said The PRICE as well as the QUALITY the gypsy. At the end of this trial the The gypsy firmly repeated: "Lame!

Vicar of Wakefield.—Catholic World. About 30 hacks had been seized in the streets of Salonika, to be used as ambulances. They went on our train and were unloaded at Sorovitch, where we left the cars. It was suggested that we lend our phorses to the officers and ride in these carriages, so it fell out that for the first time in the history of our craft perhaps we rode to war in a landau and through provinces in which landaus themselves were curiosities. The adventure reads better than it felt, for the way was over 100 to 120 miles of rough and rocky road. some to sit cramped up in an old fashioned carriage for 10 or 14 hours every day, and It was too hot to walk.

Ours was a caravan of the most modern sort, threading the most primitive corner of Europe. With our mounted officers laden with hay, baggage and clothing, we made a long, dark line upon the white and glaring road—a line that brought the country folk to the edges of the hills and the sides of the road to see what manner of men we were. - Julian Ralph in Harper's Magazine.
