What the House of Lords Is For. The house of lords cannot now profess to make the laws of the nation, but it can and does prevent vast changes being made in the constitution by a snap vote or a scratch majority. It does for the British constitution what a written document unalterable except under certain special conditions, does for other forms of government. But for it the whole of our and liberties would lie at the mercy of any man who could get control of the house o commons for 24 hours. It considers all legislation, and though in practice, it seldom ventures to make changes it is able to insist on a reference to the country if holds that a great and farreaching revolu tion is being made without the electors the light of this question, "Ought this law if not amended to be rejected has been referred to the nation with the demand.
