Then he will click them several times and magically cover them with shavings. Then he will separate the chips and shavings and show two piles of white chips. In a twinkling he will make passes with his hands, holding the two piles of chips about his head, under his blouse and about his anatomy so fast that a three card monte sharp would wonder at his dexterity.

The chatting suddenly ceases, and every eye is turned to some one of the dealers who are performing all manner of rapid passes to deceive the eyes of the bettors of the opposite tribe. When the bets have been made, the dealers sudden ly cease their passes and gyrations, and by a dexterous movement throw the chips and shavings from one hand upon the
