BRUTES MAN KILLERS.

Many of Them Who Slay Their Keepers Should Be Allowed to Plead Justifiable Homicide-Why the Indian Elephants Hate the Mahouts.

One Sunday afternoon, while a concert tenings and killed its keeper. It then brushed through various partitions of wood and glass and appeared in the main building, where a great number of persons were listening to the music. It did not attempt to hurt any of the crowd, though it broke off with its trunk the uplifted arm of a statue, probably unde the idea that this represented a man about to strike. After some time it allowed itself to be secured by another elephant. It was then decided to kill the animal, and after a dose of poison had failed a London gunmaker was sent for as executioner and shot the animal

On the following Wednesday an inquest was held on the body of the man. If it had been one of the trials of animals held by jurists in the middle ages for the exhibition of legal subtlety, the evidence in favor of the elephant could not have been more clearly put. Mr. Sanger, its owner, admitted that the animal had once before killed a former keeper, and he gave the facts which led to the death of the second. The facts speak for them-

Why, then, did he kill the second keeper? Because this man, after his Sunday dinner, declared that he would get square with the elephant for striking him with his trunk. He actually took a lance, and followed by another keeper, also armed with a lance, he proceeded to "prod," e., pierce, the chained elephant. The tortured creature, after backing as far as it could, "at length rushed forward to escape the lance, broke its chains, threw down the keeper and trampled on him." If the elephant had been a man and had been put on his trial afterward, would it be too much to anticipate that the verdict would have been one of justifiable homi-
