mals of all classes is not a mere pass ing craze. A history of the develop ment of our great middle west would be far from complete did it not embody the accomplishment of breeders of proved farm animals. There have heen times in the past when undue emphasia was placed upon pedigree, where individual merit was overshadowed by eage considerations. During such times beginners encountered much risk 30 their early purchases, as there was bound to be a strong reaction when the business stood upon a foundation sa false. However, our fathers passed through the deep waters, leaving to us an inheritance invaluable. It seems al. most as though their errors were nece

One is apt to get the impression, dur. ing the sale season particularly, that the country is flooded with improved stock. Such is not the case. There should be a thousand bidders for every blooded animal sold. The best liveres of our country are allied with these of individuals, and we can conceive of he greater display of lovalty to onesed as well as to country than may be unit. fest in an effort to improve farm and mals. When one stops to consider the enormous number of infer and in conjunction with the the great improvement that may be in the by even one cross of a blooded size it surprising that there is not an even greater demand for recorded sires.
