Each evening brought stories of strikes-scores of them. The streets of Bozle were graceless and grassless, but Valley Springs was a bower of trees and growing vines. The houses of the peak were tents, slab shacks and cabins of aspen poles, and remained so, while splendid stone pal-, aces had already appeared in the valley, and every comfort and nearly every luxury of the east was obtainable, almost common.

Skytown was the cupola of Sky camp. It surveyed the whole field, dominated only by the glittering crest of Mogalyon, which rose nearly 4,000 feet higher into the thin and fleckless air. Bozle and Hoffman and Indian Creek and Eureka and a half dozen other villages lay below. This was the town, the camp, toward which Raymond had been gazing in
