Eat the Lady. A lady who intended to give a dinner to some friends at which the piece de resistance was to be duck shot by her husband on the shores of eastern Maryland, decided that none but the very best jelly should be served as an accompaniment to the dainty fare. So she proceeded to a gorgeous Broadway establishment, a place where one pays a quarter apiece for tomatoes and a dollar a stalk for asparagus at certain seasons of the year. The jelly the clerk offered her did not appear to be just what she wanted, so she suggested another variety. "But, madam," said the clerk haughtily, "this is the very best jelly you can buy. It is made by Mrs. Mc-Guggin of Brooklyn." And he pointed to the label on the jar.

China Land of Promise. In those early days China seemed to be a land of promise, and all extalk it over plorers and navigators were seeking the shortest and safest route from Europe to the country of the Celestials. Champlain was satisfied that the Ottawa River and the St. Lawrence were the natural routes, and to prove his theory he and his bold navigators ex-plored up through the locality of Oiseau Rock. One day while the party That's why we want you to talk was resting, a number of them, so the Indian story goes, set out in a cance to investigate the surroundings of the great Rock, which their red companions told them was inhabited by spir-

Spirit had placed in the bed of the creek some of the shining metal. To those who are familiar with Indian tradition, they will remember that it is considered an insult to the Indian deity for any white man to remove gold from those places where the Great Spirit has placed the precious metal, and any of the tribe who disclosed where gold could be found was at once considered an agent of the Evil Spirit and tortured to death. After some tedious work the canoeists were rewarded by obtaining quantities of gold from the waters of the Oiseau. In their excitement and enthusiasm they forgot about the Indians, and returning the next day to secure more of the yellow metal a band of Indians seized and killed twelve of the party. Seized by Indians. It is said that a record of this episode is engraven upon the face of the rock near the water's edge, and though age and the destroying elements have obliterated a portion of the picture, still one can see the outlines of the bow and stern of what is said to be the canoe belonging to the great Champlain.
