He is heard shouting his wares for blocks along the street. LINKS WITH THE PAST

Some remarkable Instances of Associations with Historic Events

Several newspapers have recently been collecting interesting records of living people who form links with the past. Says a writer in The Daily Mail: The most striking instance have seen is that of Mrs. Forde, who was ninety-one last birthday. Her father was sixty-nine years old when she was born, he being born in 1750. That is to say that their joint lives have extended 160 years. One writer states that his father as a boy knew an old gentleman who as a boy had danced with an old lady who as a little girl had danced with Charles II. The Rev. Daniel Radford says that his great grandfather was born in the reign of Charles II. This is partly accounted for by the fact that he is more than half through his eightythird year, the youngest child but one of his father, who had ten children, and he was himself the youngest but one of twenty-five children by the younger of two wives. There is another case of a Peer who died only a quarter of a century ago, who as a lad sat in the lap of another Peer who knew the officer at the execution of

WHO ARE THE RICH? Rev. Charles Stezle has this capital definition of riches and poverty: After all, poverty is an individual matter. It does not belong to any particular class. Some people tell us that ou recountry is divided into two great classes—the wealthy class and the working class. There are really four kinds of people in the world to-day: The poor poor-those who have no money, and nothing else.

The rich poor-those who have no money, but who have many other The poor rich-those who have money, but nothing else. The rich -- those who have money as well as the other things. This last class as a rule, ought to be choose between being a "rich poor" man or a "poor rich" man, I would rather be a "rich poor" man-and anyody may be a rich poor man.
