A French theatrical journal has been questioning playwrights and other authors about smoking. Maurice Dounay replied that formerly he smoked half-a-dozen cigarettes a day; then he gave it up, and since that time he car work whenever and as much as he pleases. Alfred Capus said he would' be glad if he could give up smoking, for it gave him no pleasure, and he believed that in the long run tobacco was an undestrable collaborator., "At first we smoke to be able to work, and finally we work only to be able to smoke." Georges Fedyeau replied: "I used to smoke a great deal, but have given it up, because I found it impaired my memory." The Rosny brothers, Paul Marqueritte, and the (composer Massenet answered briefly: TO'E "We do not smoke." Louis Ganne ased the weed till he was twenty-five, when he quit, to please a woman. Clarette admitted that he smokes cig-
